HALIFAX, Tuesday, Sept. 11.

The Royal Mail steamship Africa, from Liverpool, on the afternoon of the 1st inst., arrived here at 2 o'clock this morning.

The Africa sailed at 4 o'clock this morning for Boston, where she will be the earliest news on Wednesday—so that her mails will doubtless reach New-York that night.

The Africa reports, Sept. 3, 9 o'clock P. M., in lat. 49° 9', long. 14° 37', exchanged signals with the bark Hyder, bound south. Sept. 5, lat. 46° 50', long. 33° 50', at 11 o'clock P. M., exchanged signals with the British ship Mariner, bound west.

The Cunard steamship Asia arrived out on the evening of Saturday, Aug. 25.

THE WAR.

THE BATTLE ON THE TCHERNAYA.

The papers contain many interesting details of the severe battle of Traktir Bridge, on the Tchernaya, the Gortschakoff Bridge.

General Bosquet and Pelissier both furnish reports. They say the Russian attack was a deliberate effort to raise the siege of Sebastopol, and if the Russians had succeeded in holding the heights on the Allies' side of the river, they intended further to attack the Allies from four points, namely: A main attack on Balaklava, another on the British camp, and another simultaneously on the extreme right and left of the French lines. Documents found on the body of a Russian officer indicate this.

The Allies collected the Russian force at 45,000 infantry and 4,000 cavalry, with 100 guns. The French had only 10,000 men and four batteries engaged.

The Sardinians had 4,000 men and twenty-four guns engaged, while the English had only one battery in play.

The battle began at break of day. The Russians crossed the river en masse, and drove in the Allied outposts.

Gen. Bosquet says the Russians advanced three times with the most determined bravery. Twice they were driven back by the French batteries.

The Russians charged them with the bayonet, and the slaughter in their ranks was great hence as they retreated to the river.

The English Lancers and French Mounted Chasseurs were stationed in the plain, but could not pursue the retreating army as the Russian batteries kept up a fire from their own side of the river, and then covered the ground.

The Sardinians rally the French loss 17 officers killed, and 48 wounded; 178 men killed; 180 missing, and 1,000 wounded. The Sardinian loss was 250. The loss of the Russians was 2,000 killed, and 5,000 wounded, including 1,000 wounded prisoners in the hands of the French, and 600 in the hands of the Sardinians. The Turks were not engaged.

The Russian report admits great losses and three generals killed. It attributes the loss to the too great superiority of the right column of attack. The Russian troops engaged had just arrived in the Crimea.

General Gortschakoff commanded in person from the Mackenzie heights. The Grand Duke Constantine was not present, although it was stated that he was.

The condition of the Russian dead showed that they had been subjected to a long march, and had suffered considerable hardship, which partly confirms Napoleon's recent statement that his knowledge Russian transport are exhausted.

General Pelissier issued a grandiloquent order announcing the victory, but his account does not find favor in Paris. They say that he did not make the most of his victory, nor prepare a sufficient force to watch the attack.

FROM SEBASTOPOL.

General Simpson's mail dispatch of the 12th says: General Pelissier having announced to me that the attacks against the Malakoff and adjacent works were prepared to open fire, it should be commenced yesterday morning against those works and the Redan. This was continued throughout the day, and the effect produced was as much as was anticipated. The Russians fire, which at first answered briskly, became by evening feeble. In the afternoon, shells from our mortars ignited, and a magazine of them exploded in one of the works, causing apparently much damage. Captains Otterbine and Shenney have been killed. The British loss 120.

General Gorschakoff, on the night of the 27th, telegraphs: Affairs are unchanged, but the fire of the Allies is considerably very strong.

There is a report in London to-day that General Simpson is sick, and that Colonel Barnston, the senior officer, has taken command.

Active operations will not be undertaken until the Allies have crossed the Tchernaya, and occupied the heights on the right bank, and succeeded in separating the Russian forces in the Tchernaya and Belbec Rivers.

The reinforcements are collecting for this purpose. Meanwhile, however, the Russians are expected to offer the Allies another battle near the Cemetery.

The Russians are daily expecting the arrival of General Panutine, with 3,000 cavalry, 3,000 infantry and 100 guns.

ASIA.

Omar Pacha definitely takes command in Asia, and would leave on the 21st for Trebizonde. Omar Pacha has command of the Second Division, and the troops will be conveyed in English steamers to Trebizonde.

We have no reliable intelligence from Kars or Erzerum.

The Russians have re-established communications between Gumbeli and Arabat.

Several new Russian ships are to be built this Winter at Nicolaiff.

The Baltic.

The Allied Fleets have returned from before Cronstadt, and have taken up another position. A dispatch says that the gun-boats were returning home, but in the letter that the campaign had closed; but it now appears that others ships or gun-boats returning were those which have been disabled.

The London Times contains an editorial article, attacked in very severe language, on the non-effectiveness of the fleet, and says that "Sentence and Collingwood must blush in their graves."

Bomarsund.

Various letters state that the loss of the Russians in the late battle was not less than 3,000 men. The Russian fleet says that the loss was only 30 killed, and that the guns still remain in position, and that the works are wholly uninjured.

Sebastopol.

The Berlin correspondent of the Augsburg Allgemeine says that the Prussian Cabinet has recently received from the Court Bosco's director, to the effect that Sebastopol cannot be taken by any change in her situation in regard to the outer position, because she is able to receive supplies from the other side of the Crimea, and that the Allies are not in a position to blind herself by their fire. Finally, she is able to prevent the Allies from occupying the Mamelon, and to prevent the erection of batteries on the right bank, and succeeded in separating the Russian forces on the Tchernaya and Belbec Rivers.

The above is in substance that which we find in the Prussian official journal, and probably as they did in the case of Alma, the Prussian authorities make complaint that the news page lost by the Western Powers to the Sultan is first, obliging into occupation of Turkey.

The correspondent of the London Times in Paris writes, after comparatively a long period of silence, respecting Austria: "The Austrian policy is such, that it is again stated in high quarters, that the French Government has reason to be satisfied with that power."

In reply to Austrian remonstrances, Great Britain is said to have stated, that the question of nationality will not be introduced into the present crisis, and that the depôt of the Italian recruits, now at Novara, will be removed further from the Austrian frontier.

A Berlin letter says that Count Nesselrode had addressed another letter to the Russian Ambassador, in which he says the Czar is willing to make honorable terms of peace.

DENMARK.

The King of Denmark is visiting the King of Sweden. The question of the Sound dues continues to perplex.

INDIA AND CHINA.

We have dates from Bombay to July 30. The intelligence from India is important.

A formidable insurrection had broken out in the centre of Bengal. The insurgents are the Santals and other tribes occupying the Rajmehal Hills—a bold and hardy race. They number from thirty to fifty thousand men, acting in five parties, and are armed with axes, poisoned arrows, and a few fire-arms. They have spread over the country a hundred miles in extent, destroying everything European, and protest that they are led by their God in person. The few Europeans have entrenched themselves until assistance shall arrive. The insurrection was so little anticipated that there were not a thousand troops within a hundred and fifty miles.

The London papers have soothing editorials on the subject of the intelligence confirming the recent collision of the Russians with the Khan of Khiva, and repulse of the latter.

Persia is quiet.

Shanghai advices are to June 29. Quietness was prevailing there and at Canton. Food was plentiful. Communication with the interior had been partially reopened. An enormous butchery had been perpetrated at Canton. One thousand were executed for sympathizing with the rebels. The Insurgents were losing ground in the North.

COMMERCIAL INTELLIGENCE.

Liverpool Cotton Market.

Messrs. Dennistoun & Co.'s circular reports Cotton either but not quotably higher. Brown, Shipley & Co. say the week opened dull but became firm and prices hardened, although the quotations were not advanced. Same circulars, however, quote an advance in middling descriptions to the extent of 1 16d., if not ¼d. The sales of the week amounted to 51,450 bales, of which speculators took 5,250 bales and exporters 5,700 bales. The following are the quotations: Fair Orleans 7¾d.; Middling 6¾d & 6 11-16d.; Fair Uplands 6¾d.; Middling 6¾d. Fair Mobile 6¾d.; Middling 6 13-16d & 6¾d. The sales on Friday were 8,000 bales, including 2,000 bales to speculators. The market closed steady. The stock in port was 567,000 bales, including 297,000 bales American.

Liverpool Breadstuffs Market.

Messrs Brown, Shipley & Co. say that the market generally shows but little change, although a dull tone prevailing. Corn had declined 1d. 2 quarter. Western Canal Flour they quote at 40s @40s. 6d.; Philadelphia and Baltimore 42s @43s.; Ohio 43s @43s. Wheat dull, but prices unchanged. White 11s 2d @11s. 3d.; Red 10s. 2d @11s 6d.; Mixed Corn 32s 6d.; White 34s. Yellow 35s. 6d. Some Baltimore quote Corn in active speculative demand, and prices slightly advanced; but they give the quotations nearly the same as the above. The weather had been favorable, and prospects continued good for an average crop.

Liverpool Provision Market.

Messrs. Richardson, Spence & Co. quote Beef and Pork dull, but prices unchanged. Bacon firm. Lard 6d. higher, and steady; sales at 56s. @57s. Tallow advanced 6d.

Liverpool Produce Market.

NEWS BY THE ARAGO.

The Arago arrived at this port yesterday with mails from Southampton to the 29th ult.

Among the passengers by the Arago are H. Hart, Commissioner of the Supreme Court, Victoria, Australia, C. J. Derstinatti, Chargé d'Affaires and Consul for Sardinia, Dr. W. S. Mayo and lady, and L. de Gromberiane, Bishop of Burlington, Vt.

Gen. Pelissier in an order of the day dated Aug. 17 says that the Russians lost in the battle of the 16th, more than 6,000 men and lost 2,200 wounded and prisoners in the hands of the Allies. Six Turkish battalions and a battery of artillery took part in the battle and behaved valiantly.

On the morning of the 17th August, the English batteries opened their fire, which enabled them to advance their works of approach.

The Times' Baltic correspondent states, that on the 15th ult. six Russian gunboats came out from Cronstadt, and having intimated by their movements that they were prepared to measure their strength with any vessel that dared to go out to meet them, the Imperieuse, Bulldog and Centaur were ordered to slip in close and try to cut them off. The Russian gunboats, however, beat a retreat as quickly as possible into shallow water. The three English ships opened fire upon them, which was returned. The engagement lasted about two hours with little damage to either side.

The Kenna Gazette says: "According to reliable advices of the 25th of August, from Constantinople, the garrison of Kars has made a successful sortie against the Russians. The Russian corps which threatened Erzerourn has been withdrawn.

Accounts from Trebizond of the 7th ult. confirm the news of the Russians being at only three hours' march from Erzerourn. The English Consul at that place had removed all the archives of his office to Trebizond. Letters from Kars to the 28th July state that, notwithstanding the approach of the Russian Army, the spirit of the troops was excellent.

The last accounts from Odessa state that the Russians had launched several vessels which had been on the stocks at Nicolajoff. An attack by Gen. Mouravieff on Erzerourn appeared inevitable. The fortifications of the place are incomplete. The Sultan has consented to the departure of Omar Pasha for Asia, subject, however, to the consent of the Allied Generals.

The Allies have placed 150 new mortars in position before Sebastopol. The Russians have doubled the garrison of that place, and are preparing for a desperate defence. The Allies expect the most favorable result from the bombardment. A Belgian brig, the Rubis, has been pillaged at Sulina.

The newspapers report an engagement which took place of Riga on the 10th ult. Seventeen Russian gunboats, it is said, came out of Riga and fought for two hours with Her Majesty's screw block ship Hecate, sixty guns, and the screw corvette Desperate, eight guns. The result is said to have been indecisive.

Her Majesty, the Queen, and family, left Boulogne on the night of the 27th ult., in the Royal yacht Victoria and Albert, and arrived at Osborne House on the following morning. Her Majesty rode from Paris with the French Emperor and the Prince Napoleon, in the Emperor's State carriage. The farewell was most enthusiastic, and the Illuminations superb. Gen. Canrobert formed part of the cortège.

AFFAIRS IN SPAIN.

Burning the Concordat—The Excommunication of the Nation—Decrease of the Cholera—The Spanish Contingent for the Crimea, &c.

Special Correspondence to the N. Y. Daily Times.

PARIS, Friday, Aug 31, 1855.

I informed you that the populace of Madrid were desirous of burning the last concordat with the Pope in the public square. It is six days since I received the particulars of the movement which was suppressed by the Government.

The mob, it seems, had conceived the idea of not only burning that document, but of burning the Pope himself—in effigy—and a very neat, apostolical looking effigy, I am told, it was, too. But their amusement was cut short by the long sabre of the Minister-of-War, without any blood spilt, or any fair chance of spilling any.

The news of a proximate excommunion of the nation by His Holiness, which has already circulated in every direction, has not produced such terror in Spanish consciences as was hoped. It looks really as if spiritual thunder, without the aid of thumb-screws and faggots, had lost its force even in Spain.

Little besides the agitation of this rupture with Rome is there to tell of out of Spain in its history for the last week.

The forced loan has produced thus far voluntarily a million and a half of dollars, and if the time for voluntary subscription were prolonged, as perhaps it will be, the necessity of forcing any considerable part of it may be avoided. It will be remembered that the paper of this loan is taken at par by the Government in payment of lands released from mortmain by the recent law of the Cortes. This will keep it up—forced or not forced. In many parts, undoubtedly, the decrease of the cholera will also improve the financial prospects of the country. The wheat will be reaped at least and famine and misery avoided to that extent.

There is no doubt that the force of the epidemic is declining, upon the whole, though there are still some points terribly scourged anew. Valencia, which was decimated about eight months since, has just lost more than a thousand of its remaining population by the disease in two days. In Madrid the cases are limited to forty or fifty daily, as heretofore.

There is a good deal of talk lately about the intrigues of the Court at the Escorial, and it is pretty generally understood that the Queen is doing all in her power to keep on good terms personally with the Pope, and that the idea of separating herself as much as possible from the people in this business is her desire and intention.

Poor Isabel! I greatly fear she has not comprehended that the only chance of her surviving the deep popular movement through which Spain is now passing is to unite herself frankly and fully to the interests of the Spanish people in every respect. If she does otherwise, she enters upon a struggle which will surely prove fatal to her interests, and it may be to her life.

Those who counsel her to such a course are blind, and will probably deeply regret their blindness. They cannot succeed, though the incompetence of the actual popular leaders may be only too evident. There may be some little reaction; but if so, the feeble swing backwards will be only a prelude to such a vigorous swing forwards as will carry everything before it. Gentlemen of the bed-chamber, equerries and noblemen in waiting, if you do not go straight along in the same path with the people, without turning or tricking, within ten years the possession of a title will be a thing for which you will have to beg pardon of your countrymen in Spain, hat in hand, and prestige and authority nowhere.

The matter of the contingent of Spanish troops for the Crimea remains in statu quo—come to a stand point already—and from that point, it is probable, not all the power of France and England can move it. There will be a great deal of talk in the Cortes after they come together, on the 1st of October—great deal of talk and very little action. The Government cannot stir; the people are decided and united against the project, and the alliance of Spain will probably not have more of any such advantage to France as an authority indication the Emperor of Russia towards her upon the Seven appeared on the Rhine in 1807.

O'Donnell is powerful still, but more and more suspected and distrusted by the people, while Espartero, "the Duke of Vicatory, is growing less indispensable every day. His lack of talent and lack of character are getting to be more and more evident to the people. Some lively little caricatures have been circulating recently, and though the police has endeavored to suppress them, even imprisoning some individuals, still the work of the little infamous libels is done to a great extent, and the very pains the Government has taken with them show, that they have touched where the sore is. One of these is described by a correspondent of mine as representing a good, fat, well-to-do Spanish donkey, full of the steadfastness of stupidity and the long-eared complacency of a frugal and honorable donkeyism never belied; a donkeyism which never flew up behind except against strangers and our dogs, and never ate a thistle or an onion that was not legitimately its own. This respectable and wholly unobjectionable donkey, having the revered countenance of the Duke of Victory, is mounted by General O'Donnell, in a nondescript uniform, made up of the coat and breeches of the national militia, with the cocked hat, sash and long boots of a Captain General (Field Marshall) in the army, and a pair of long spurs, which worry the sleek flanks of the respectable animal beneath him terribly. It ought to be remembered that O'Donnell actually wore such a uniform at a review of the militia of Madrid, not long since, and was not a little criticised and laughed at for his pains.

Yours, very truly,

AN MERICAN.

THE WAR.

The Russian Attack on the Tchernaya—Description of the Battle—Scenes and Incidents.

From the Correspondent of the London Times.

CAMP OF THE ALLIED ARMIES ON THE TCHERNAYA, August 16.

The long-threatened attack of the Russians on the Tchernaya line has at last taken place, and ended in the complete defeat of the enemy. During the last few days the signs of an impending Russian attack became more and more frequent. The movements of large numbers of troops in the neighborhood of Sebastopol, the unanimous reports of the deserters, of whom several came in every day, and, lastly, information gained from numbers of Tartars who bring in continually news from the Russian lines, were all to the effect that the Russians, having received part of the reinforcements which they were expecting, intended to try their luck once more in an offensive operation.

Although at first the line of the Tchernaya suggested itself as the point which the Russians would most probably attack, a supposition which was moreover confirmed by all the deserters, yet, as there were large numbers of newly arrived troops observed in and about the Russian works, apprehensions were entertained that perhaps the Russians might attempt something against the positions of the allied armies before Sebastopol, and the chief attention was consequently directed to that point.

BEFORE THE BATTLE—ANTICIPATION.

Yesterday again several deserters came in, and spoke with the utmost certainty of an intended attack on the Tchernaya lines; but as this had been the case several times already during the last fortnight, no particular attention was paid to their reports, and no special orders given to the troops, except to be prepared for an attack; and this had been so often repeated that it made no impression. In addition to this, our attention was drawn off from the Lower Tchernaya by the news from Baidar. I wrote in my last letter that when the arrival of fresh troops at Sebastopol became known, the four troops of English light cavalry were withdrawn from Baidar, and only two regiments of heavy French cavalry and a few Chasseurs and Zouaves remained in the valley until all the hay collected should be carried away. Yesterday afternoon General Allonville sent news from Baidar by telegraph, that large numbers of Russian troops were concentrated on the heights above the valley and that he expected to be attacked. The telegraphic message was interrupted by the dense fog which prevailed in the afternoon, but late in the evening notice of this message of General Allonville was sent to General La Marmora and Omar Pasha. As the cavalry at Baidar would be exposed to be cut off if it were attacked by a considerable force, on account of the great number of carts which are down in the valley for the transport of hay, and which would encumber the Woronzoff road, an attack on that side seemed not at all improbable.

Even at this circumstance it followed that no additional precautions were taken on the Tchernaya line, and that the attack was scarcely less a surprise than that of Inkermann.

COMMENCEMENT OF THE BATTLE—THE LOCALITY.

The first news of an actual attack was brought about daybreak by some French Chasseurs, who, forming part of a patrol, fell into an ambuscade of the Russians, and narrowly escaped, while their comrades were taken prisoners. Soon afterwards the outposts which were across the Tchernaya were driven in, and about daybreak the cannonade began.

For the better understanding of the movements I must give you some description of the locality. The Tchernaya, coming out at the tower of Kariouka from the narrow gorge in which it runs after leaving the valley of Baidar, flows between a succession of hillocks on both sides. These hillocks form the basis of the position of the allied armies. On the extreme right, beginning where the Tchernaya comes out of the gorge down to the little mountain streams which fall into the Tchernaya from the south, are the Turks. They occupy two hillocks, and between them are two roads which lead from Higher Tchergoun and the tower of Kariouka into the Woronzoff-road. The Sardinian position leans to the right on the little mountain stream which limits the Turkish position to the left. They occupy the large solitary standing hillocks which used to be held by the Cossacks, and which extends down to the open ground over which the road from Balaklava to Tchergoun leads. This hillock has been lately considerably strengthened and provided with batteries, and, as it has a very commanding position, was of the utmost importance in the defence of the Tchernaya line. In front of this hillock, and divided from it by the aqueduct which begins there, is another smaller but equally steep hillock, accessible from the first by a stone bridge, and on this hillock the Sardinians had a small épaulement guarded by a detachment of infantry. Beyond both these hillocks, on the other side of the Tchernaya, they had moreover on the hillock nearest to the Mackenzie road their outposts, which could thus watch the movements of the enemy and give timely alarm in case of an attack. The French occupy the last series of hillocks to the left of the Sardinians, and guard the road which leads from Balaklava over the Traktir-bridge, up to Makenzie's farm. The hillocks, occupied by them, are three in number; the first, to the right, is separated from the others by the great road leading to the bridge; and the last, to the left, is protected by the basin which the aqueduct forms here, and is separated by another open ground, similar to that on the right of the French position, from the ridge on which the army of observation was during the Winter. In front of the bridge the French had constructed a small épaulement to guard the passage of the river, beyond which they had their outposts.

THE RUSSIAN ATTACK.

The first movement of the Russians was against the outposts of the Sardinians on the opposite bank of the river. Corresponding to the hillocks on this side of the Tchernaya are three plateaux on the opposite bank. These were chosen for the left of the Russian position against the Turks and the Sardinians. These plateaux were, therefore, first to be secured, for the guns could command from them not only the hillocks opposite, occupied by the Sardinians and Turks, but likewise the plain which opens towards the French position. A company of infantry of the line, and a company of Bersaglieri formed the Sardinian outposts. These were attacked at dawn by the Russians. As the troops were not yet under arms, it was necessary to hold the position for awhile, and General De La Marmora sent over Major Govone, with a company of Bersaglieri, to reinforce the two companies already there. They crossed the aqueduct and the river, and went up the plateau; but, when they arrived on the crest of it, the two companies had just left the épaulement behind which they had until then defended themselves gallantly against the ever-whelming numbers of the enemy, but which henceforth untenable, and it was swept by the guns which the Russians had brought up on the two other plateaux, and besides was exposed to be taken in the rear. So the troops retired in good order across the river, and went to reinforce the post which occupied the second hillock on the banks of the aqueduct. In the meantime the cannonade on both sides had begun. The Russians left us not in doubt where they would attack, for, scarcely had the cannonade begun, when three columns of infantry were seen advancing towards the plain opposite to the French position. The points chosen were the bridge and the hillock to the right. The masses, which in the morning sun looked like glittering waves, protected by the fire of their artillery, moved in excellent order down to the river side, notwithstanding the heavy fire of artillery which greeted them in front from the French, and in flank from Sardinians. At the river the first column detached itself from the rest, and dividing into two columns crossed the river, which is now nearly everywhere fordable. Men carrying portable wooden bridges preceded, but in the first rush the Russians, without waiting for bridges, waded over wherever they could, and delivering like a swarm of bees rushed forward to distribute some against the bridge, the others against the hillock on the right.

SCATTERED FIRE OF RUSSIAN TROOPS.

As I said above, the cannonade began at dawn, and lasted some time; notwithstanding the signs which seemed to indicate a general movement on the part of the Russians, everybody slept as quietly as patriots could awakened by the Russian guns. Before the troops were properly under arms the Russians were at the bridge and at the foot of the hillock. The 15th Lyon and the 5th battalion of Zouaves had to stand the first shock, and they certainly stood it gallantly. The rush of the Russians was splendid. Without losing their time with firing, they advanced with an élan scarcely ever seen in Russian troops. Some French soldiers of Canon's Division, who have during the Winter guarded the trenches towards the Quarantine, and have had nearly daily skirmishes with the Russians, assured me that they never saw them nearing on in such a style. They were new troops, belonging, according to the prisoners and wounded, to the 5th division of the 3d corps d'armée lately arrived from Poland. But their valor was soon broken. They could not carry their point, and were, after a short trial, repulsed back on the bridge and the hillock. The aqueduct which separates the Turks, and which runs close to the foot of the hillock, formed the chief defence of the French. About nine and ten feet wide and several feet deep, it skirts the steep hills so close, that it is nearly in all places supported by a high embankment, offering considerable difficulties for an advancing force, and exposing it, as long as it reaches the top of it, to the musketry fire from the heights. Nevertheless this difficulty, the Russians crossed it on the right and were beginning to scale the heights, when, taken in flank by the Sardinian batteries, which fired with admirable precision, they were swept down by wholesale and rolled into the aqueduct below.

REPULSE.

This first rush did not last more than 10 minutes. The Russians fell back, but they had scarcely gone a few hundred yards when they were met by the second column, which was advancing à pas de charge to support the first, and both united and again rushed forward. This second attempt was more successful than the first. As the bridge they forded the river on the right and left, and forced the defenders of it to fall back. Scarcely was the bridge free when two guns of the 5th Light Brigade of Artillery crossed it and took up a position on the opposite side in an open space which divides two of the hillocks, and through which the road leads to the plain of Balaklava. While these two guns passed the bridge a third crossed the river by a ford, and all three began to sweep the road and the heights. The infantry in the meantime, without waiting for the portable bridges, which had moreover been thrown away in great part during the advance, rushed breast-deep into the water, climbed up the aqueduct, and began to scale the heights on both sides. They succeeded on this point in getting up more than one-half of the ascent, where the dead and wounded afterwards showed clearly the mark which they reached; but by the time they arrived there the French were fully prepared and met them in the most gallant style. Notwithstanding the exertions and the perseverance of the Russians, they were by degrees forced back and driven, after an obstinate resistance, across the bridge, carrying away their guns.

ATTACK ON THE FRENCH RIGHT.

While this attack took place on the bridge the other column attacked the French right. This time they came on in such a swarm that they were neither kept back by the aqueduct, nor cowed by the Sardinian guns, which were sweeping long lanes through their sentient lines. On they came as it seemed, irresistible, and rushed up the steep hill with such fury that the Zouaves, who lined the sides of it, were obliged to fall back for a moment before the multitude. You could plainly see the officers leading the way, and animating their soldiers. I particularly observed one gallant fellow, who, at least 30 yards in advance of the whole column, was the first across the aqueduct, and I could still see him on the side of the hill. This furious rush brought the attacking column in an incredibly short time to the crest of the hillock, where it stopped to form. But the French had not been idle during the time that the Russians were ascending the hill. The Zouaves had only fallen back from the side of the hillock to the main body, which had been drawn up behind the top. Scarcely did the column of the enemy show its head, when the guns opened on it with grape, and a murderous fire was poured down upon it by the French infantry. This immediately stopped the advance of the column, which began to waver, but the impetus from those behind was so powerful that the head of it, notwithstanding the unexpected reception, was pushed forward a few yards more, when the French, giving one more fire, rushed upon the advancing enemy, who, shaken already, immediately turned round and ran down, if possible, faster than they had come up. But the mischief was so great that all the hurry could not save them, and more than 200 prisoners were taken on the spot, while the hillside, the banks of the aqueduct, the aqueduct itself, and the riverside were filled with dead and wounded. The Sardinian and French artillery poured, moreover, a murderous enfilade into the scattered remains of the column, of which scarcely a man missed. It was a complete rout. The French routed down the hillside and drove them far across the plain. This defeat seems to have so completely cowed them that nothing more was attempted against this side.

REPULSED AGAIN.

Not so on the bridge. Notwithstanding the heavy loss suffered by the second attack, the Russians concentrated once more all their forces, collected the scattered remains of the column which had been routed on the right of the French position, and brought up all their reserves to attempt one more attack. They again crossed the river, and the aqueduct, and tried to take the hillock by storm; in vain; the French were now thoroughly prepared, and the tenacity of the Russians served only to augment their losses. They were seen men dying in all directions, followed by the French. This last attack was decisive, and immediately the men at Russian preparation for defeat—namely, the advance of the artillery—showed clearly that the Russians acknowledged themselves defeated and were on the point of retiring. Three batteries, each of 12 guns, which during the greatest part of the attack had been nearly silent, began to open their fire, while the scattered remains of the infantry columns rallied behind a rising ground leading up towards the plateau of Akyar, or Mackenzie's height.

THE SARDINIANS.

The Sardinians, who, with the exception of the little outpost fight on the opposite side of the Tchernaya, had confined themselves to support the French by their admirable artillery, which entirely subdued the Russian fire on the opposite plateaux, began now to move across the aqueduct. The Russian riflemen, after the last defeat on the right, had retired behind the banks of the Tchernaya, whence they kept up a brisk but ineffective fire. A battalion of Fiodmontese, preceded by a company of Bersaglieri, advanced in beautiful order, as if on parade, and soon drove these riflemen from their position. It even advanced some way towards the plateaux, but, as it was not intended to force the heights, it contented itself, supported by other troops, with following the enemy, who was already in full retreat.

The French had, during the battle, brought up a new division (Dulac's). Besides this, the whole English and French cavalry were in readiness on the plain leading to the river, the ground of the light cavalry charge last year, ready to receive the enemy if he should force the passage of the river and debouch on the plain. But General Menasce would not risk the cavalry on the plain, intersected as it was by the branches of the river, and defended as it was still by the Russian guns on the height; so only two squadrons of Chasseurs d'Afrique followed the enemy.

THE RUSSIANS IN RETREAT.

The guns which the Russians had brought up to cover their retreat suffered so much by the fire from our side, which was increased by Captain Mowbray's battery opening upon them from the open ground between the Sardinian and the French positions, that they made off in a hurry. Scarcely a shot was thrown away, and so admirable was the practice that all the shot fell at or close to the guns, which we could plainly distinguish, as a slight breeze carrying off the smoke left a beautiful view over the whole battle field. But the Russian guns returned only for a moment to fire cover, and soon after you could see a brilliant line of cavalry descending from the rising ground, where it had been hitherto hidden. I could distinguish five regiments—three in one line, and two other regiments on the flanks in second line. They advanced at a gallop, and, wheeling round, allowed 12 guns to pass, which again opened their fire, but only for a short time, and at 4 or 10 o'clock the dust on the Mackenzie road and the black lines moving off were the only traces which remained of the so long threatened attack of the Russians.

THE BATTLE FIELD.

Everybody now rushed to the battle field, and one look was sufficient to convince them that the Allies had won a real battle on the Tchernaya. Although not quite so obstinate and sanguinary as the battle of Inkermann, which this affair resembled in many points, it was a pitched battle. The Russians, as in the battle of Inkermann, gave up maneuvering, and confided entirely in the valor of their troops. The essential difference was in the manner of fighting. At the battle of Inkermann the great mass of the Russians fell under the fire of the bayonets of the infantry, while on the Tchernaya it was the guns which did the greatest execution. Most of the wounded and dead showed frightful traces of round-shot, grape, shell and canister, so that as a battle field one could scarcely imagine anything more terrible. Nearly all the wounds were on the legs and the head. On the banks of the aqueduct particularly the sight was appalling; the Russians when passing the embankment of the aqueduct were taken in flank by the Sardinian batteries, and the dead and wounded rolled down the embankment, sometimes more than twenty feet in height. The French made every possible despatch to collect the wounded. They were laid on the open space about the bridge until the ambulances arrived. While there the Russians, who could see plainly that the French were engaged in bringing help to their own wretched countrymen, suddenly began to open with their guns upon them, repeating the barbarous practice which they had already often previously shown to the French. A gentleman who was with me at the moment, and who speaks Russian, called out of the poor fellows who was trying to trudge along with deep flesh wounds on both his thighs, what he thought of the behavior of the

AFFAIRS IN PERU.

[Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.]

LIMA, PERU, SUNDAY, Aug. 12, 1855.

The political news of the last fortnight in this country possesses more an item of interest to North American readers. The Constitutional Convention (or Congress) has accomplished just nothing since my last. Indeed, the child which this body dies in its infancy, is well calculated to rob the United States Congress of laurels which I once imagined were beyond competition.

In my communication of the 25th ult., I gave you the sentiment of Captain ADAMS' (sense from the commander of the Pacific) prevarications of the Government of Peru. A few days since, a resolution was adopted in Congress, and in the first night of Spanish fashion, demanding of the "North American minister" Mr. CLAY, and of Commodore BLAKELY, in far beyond the reach of the Government to hit the matter root and branch, and to put an end to the evil the first, and the probably further with the character or the motives of those who employ him. Mr. CLAY has spent many long years in the faithful service of his country, and has acquired an expertness in the duties of the station he now occupies, which cannot by few. His energetic action in the case of Captain ADAMS is the best illustration of the well known character of his statesmanship. A certain generosity in his nature—or, rather, the absence of all meanness in his intercourse with others, has been the cause of his frequently mistaken for hauteur and pride, the existence of his private kindnesses towards those, which have happened to pass under my observation, entirely set that his heart and his head are in the right place, and will ever find a fellow-countryman ready to every fellow-countryman in distress. I tried to find one of our stark New-York regiments following such "standard bearers!" but found the thing a peg above my imagination. While the head of the regiment was allotted to these spectacles, every here and there, sit down the line of troops, might be seen some luckless "citizen," who had incurred the displeasure of commissioned candidates for military glory, dragged along by an upstarted officer, whose left hand firmly grasped his prisoner's shirt collar, while in his right he flourished his unsheathed sword.

Another expedition for the exploration of the Amazon country left this city for the scene of their labors a few days since. The explorers are chiefly North Americans, and are commanded by a citizen of the United States, who, in behalf of the Company, has entered into a contract with the Government of Peru, for the exploration of that region of the Amazon country watered by the river Madre de Dios, (Mother of God,) of which almost nothing is known. This river is a tributary of the Paros, rising near the ancient city of Cuzco, and running in a northeasterly direction, striking Brazil somewhere about 10° north latitude. By the way, among all those who have contributed to awaken an interest in the exploration of the Amazon country, there is none, probably, whose efforts have been earlier, more continuous, or more successful than have those of Mr. CLAY; and I have not a little reason to suppose that this expedition to the Madre de Dios is one of the fruits of his labors here.

The Peruvian Winter season is still upon us, and we are frequently drenched by a most dismal Scotch mist. Occasionally, however, the clouds clear away, and we have a day of the most brilliantly beautiful weather for which this country is famed. At such times the climate certainly seems most charming; the air is pure, clear, elastic and bracing. Nevertheless, I long to witness again a heavy shower of the glittering rain-drops; and the snow-covered peaks of the Andes visible from my window on a clear day, have more charms for me than the green-clad hills and verdant vales which lie just back of the city. The climate of Peru, nevertheless, certainly deserves the high encomiums of which it has been the subject; but that is the only thing I find here to admire, although there is much to interest and amuse. Manifesto of the Junta to the People of Cuba.

Review of Recent Failures—The Spanish Insurrection—Cuba's Opportunity—Plan of Operations—Disappointments—The Chief Opposed to Intervention—Present Condition of the Junta—Future Prospects.

CUBANS: Respecting your known anxiety and yielding to reasons of weight, your Junta will now break the silence, which considerations of the highest importance have hitherto imposed on the men whom you have charged with the sacred mission of realizing the revolutionary idea.

A great and painful disappointment has mocked your ardent hopes and baffled your legitimate expectations. Precious blood has been shed, large resources and great means of action have been sacrificed, and Cuba, still in bondage and trampled upon, has the right to inquire what causes have again overclouded her destiny, and to ask whether there yet remains to her the basis of a trust for better days. Your just impatience shall now be satisfied, as fully as the duties of your Junta will permit—as far as the revelations of the past shall not endanger the present, nor create new perils for the future.

None of you are ignorant of the nature and extent of the plan you entrusted to us for execution. A sad experience had twice demonstrated the insufficiency of attempts which, though they startled the world by their sublime daring and heroic achievements, left bloodshed and mourning in their track, and only augmented the vigilance and discipline of our oppressors. Cuba now required better guarantees of triumph, though always resolute to engage by her courage and constancy the serious odds she must inevitably encounter in the new struggle in which she is preparing to launch herself.

This project—the wish of the vast majority—sanctioned by your suffrages and sustained by the moral and material means you placed at our disposal—this holy plan of our national redemption, was frustrated just as it touched upon the point of effective execution. The simple statement of the facts, and the publication in due time of the numerous explanatory documents, will show how the Junta is responsible for this misfortune. The election of a military chief, the concentration in his hands of all the elements and powers for action, though sharply criticised and keenly censured since the events, were then founded on solid reasons, theoretic and practical, and had the consent, tacit or expressed, of all the patriots who had in any manner contributed to the progress of our revolution. Irrefragable evidence of the general sentiment we need but say that on the question of selecting and empowering a chief, both the party nominated and the powers conferred were in the first instance suggested and afterwards approved and ratified by the very revolutionists whose present vehement objections make them worthy—in some estimations—the distinctive title of "men of action."

It could not be otherwise, as these measures were calculated to give to our proceedings the stamp of concert and unity, and to impress our enterprise with that character of magnitude and importance which made it so alarming to our oppressors. To disregard these truths of yesterday in the judgments of to-day would be a grave surrender of the requirements of reason and equity.

The duty of the Junta thus became limited to completing the collection of the large resources now demanded by the plan—to watch over the fulfilment by the Chief of all the conditions of the contract, and to forward, by every means in its power, the prompt realization of the movement on which hung the destinies of our country.

The Junta was occupied with these objects, and all, perhaps, would have been accomplished, if certain events had not come to disturb the harmony of our labors and destroy the accord which ought to reign in all our efforts. Truth is the first duty of your Junta, and it will never shrink from it on any occasion, least of all when it involves on one side the historical connection of the cause which produced the disaster we so much lament, and on the other presents the facts on which the Cubans must base the verdict they are about to pronounce upon the men whom they have entrusted with their confidence.

About the middle of the past year of 1854, the revolution broke forth in which Spain is still involved. Coincident with this movement was the growing alarm produced in Cuba by the measure of General PANUELA, which presaged a violent solution to the social problem that weighs so heavily on the destinies of the country. The occasion seemed most favorable for the realization of our enterprise. The idea was fortified not only by the complication likely to arise in Europe from the Eastern war, then commenced, but the attitude assumed by the American Government in its relations with Spain—an attitude which promised at the least, that with regard to the Cuban revolution it would restrict its interference to the observance of the laws of neutrality, which those who were here for the liberty of Cuba did not intend to violate.

This concurrence of circumstances, by stimulating the impatience of a portion of the Cubans, brought for the first time discord into our already arranged field of labor. Unfortunately, the Junta itself could not preserve the unity requisite to ensure a happy result to the enterprise. One portion—either actuated by its own rooted convictions, or yielding to the impulses which carried away the more ardent—began to put in action and provide the indispensable requisites for a project of its own, employing for its particular purpose, without the knowledge or sanction of the Junta or of its elected chief, the funds and material that had been placed at the disposal of the latter; regardless of the plan they had agreed upon some time before, and which had since been ripening, and which only a few days before they had all ratified—unanimously and unconditionally ratified—and by which the means and the execution of the plan were solely and exclusively confided to the chief chosen to head the movement.

The official explanation which was afterwards pretended to be given of these motor and isolated combinations differs elsewhere from this statement; but even if it were possible to admit it, it would not justify the exceptional and disguised mode by which they aimed to hurry the execution of a plan already confided to another and sole direction. The Junta, however, has abundant means to sustain all it asserts. The confidential declarations made in moments of expansion by one of the parties to members of the Junta, and to many others—the organizations and preparations which were undertaken and divulged in a Southern State—the written acknowledgment now in the hands of the Chief, by which it appears that this member of the Junta is working in common with some persons in Cuba to accomplish particular ends—in a word, the Junta has in its favor a mass of evidence which it will be impossible to invalidate by simple denials.

In critical and abnormal epochs it may perhaps be better to listen to the impulse of enthusiasm, than abide by the inevitable slowness of premeditated combinations. The majority of the Junta would have wished so to persuade itself with regard to the schemes of some of its members; but now, when it is so bitterly undeceived in its own most fascinating conclusions, it cannot concede that this unadvised and unauthorized action was ever founded on any solid reasons.

The reigning plan had been for two months the object of earnest and anxious discussion among those members of the Junta then stationed at the South, but these discussions were postponed until the whole body could be united and other patriots be convoked in order to imprint perfect certainty in the enlightened concurrence of greater number. By common consent—and what is more, by the deliberate advice and stringent request of celebrators of the highest consideration—the continuation of the plan was agreed upon, confirmed and signed as the only one on which Cuba placed her faith and her hopes.

After these solemn acts, could it occur to the Junta, could it even conceive, that transactions of such a class should be cast aside for a new project? Had the chief then been compelled about dissolving the compact, as he had been in making it with him?

Did one portion of the Junta solicit the acquiescence of the other in this unauthorized innovation? Even in the supposition that it had been invited, neither should the Junta consent to the modification of a plan which was the well considered fruit of so many painful experiences? Had it the right to impose a new one, breaking the compact sanctioned by its constituents? And even conceding that, had it the right to launch blindly into a new enterprise, without closing the old one, so as not to have it leave consequences ruinous to its successor?

Should it rush into it without preparation, without known chiefs, with insufficient powers, with none of the requisites which have been insisted upon again and again by the unanimous vote of those who gave us the mission to save our beautiful country—not to involve her in bloody anarchy of revolution?

Whatever circumstances they invoked, could any exist that would redeem the errors and remove the certain dangers of a partial, isolated attempt, unexpected in Cuba, conceived in precipitation, and which would undoubtedly have been executed with the confusion and incompetency that attend such improvisations? Where was the Lopez for a work of such magnitude? Or was this what Cuba expected, and had a right to expect?

To state these questions is, we believe, to answer them, and to explain the spirit of the firm opposition made by the conservative portion of the Junta to the new project from the moment it came to its knowledge. This inflexible opposition it maintained, whenever it has suspected a renewed effort, and if it did not convince the minority, it had the effect of induciing it to return, ostensibly, to the way from which it had departed. In consequence, it agreed, with every appearance of sincerity, to make in concert new efforts to urge forward the original plan. The Junta then addressed a letter to the chief, detailing all the motives of convenience and opportunity which demanded prompt action, and invited him to fix a term to this state of suspense and uncertainty, and satisfy the legitimate anxiety of the entire Cuban people.

Yet, strange to say, without waiting the result of this important affair, the treasurer of the Junta addressed a private letter to the chief, in which one is at a loss which to wonder at most, its inconsistency or its open confession of the writer's purpose, to act altogether upon his own inspirations and the arrangements which he had made with some of his friends in Cuba—a sinister precedent, that only served to confirm the doubts and suspicions which had such a fatal influence on after events.

It did not, however, prevent the chief from answering the request of the Junta, and indicating a period for the execution of the enterprise. This might have calmed the impatient, for though the time was put off longer than it had expected or could have wished, it was also true that it would not be possible to accumulate much sooner the resources and to concentrate and combine all the elements necessary to the desired end.

The Junta, relying on the solemn and renewed pledges of the chief, consented to everything, resolving on its own part to meet with the utmost promptitude the new financial estimates he had fixed, and to remove every obstacle which could on that side be made a reason or a pretext for increased delays, or for the misunderstandings and discussions which had hitherto occurred on the other side.

Thanks to the ready cooperation of many and good patriots, the first was soon accomplished, even beyond the demand. Not thus the second, which depended on the course of events, and on the views and will of others; and whatever its efforts, the Junta could not control it. It must be here observed that all the means and material accumulated for the enterprise, were in the hands of the Treasurer of the Junta, and the chief secured the absolute delivery of these effects to him as an indispensable condition of the renewed contract for realizing the enterprise.

The Junta is obliged to declare that, for one reason or another, through want of a good mutual understanding—sometimes from an excess of susceptibility arising out of ill-considered or badly understood expressions, written and verbal, and from other causes—this condition was not fulfilled in the form and manner expected by the chief. From this arose unconscious disagreements, with constant distrusts and reclamations, which the unceasing effort of the Junta, nor even the conciliatory protestations which were frequently renewed between the parties, could extinguish, although the treasurer was then in many ways rendering the cause frequent and eminent services.

More difficult, indeed, was the position of the conservative portion of the Junta, in endeavoring, as it believed to be its duty, to smooth away these difficulties and avoid a rupture either with the chief or with the others, which in any case must be pernicious to the enterprise.

Near three months passed away in this painful suspense, for the Junta could exact nothing from the chief, who at every appeal referred to the non-fulfilment of one of the most essential conditions of the contract, and having no legal recourse on the other party, it had no other means than those of persuasion and friendship to induce him to meet this requisition, without giving more room and excuse for the inaction and delay of which the chief was accused. It is very certain that in these circumstances a frank, loyal and sincere conduct would, at the least, have lessened the magnitude of the disaster in which we are now involved. Whatever the reason—and then none existed—of the depreciation which, from certain quarters, was falling upon the chief and his plans, would an enlightened patriotism counsel the indefinite prolongation of a state of things from which nothing but evil could emanate?

Why did not the opposition at once put itself in the right, and not open the field for more delays, and, at last, when there was no remedy, for the abandonment of the enterprise? The simple correspondence on these points, preserved in the Secretary's archives, will some day manifest how completely the Junta exhausted its efforts to conciliate affairs, and to what extent it carried its abnegation and endurance when it believed it was demanded for the realization of the enterprise. It does not belong to it to express opinions, but it asserts, and can demonstrate by authentic documents, that the system of mediation pursued by the Junta—a course advised by the chief and recommended by an imperious necessity, as well as its zealous exertions to maintain the original plan in its integrity, and to urge it to a successful conclusion, merited the approbation of all the friends of Cuba liberty. Besides, could this be doubted when the Junta was receiving the most unequivocal evidence of the sanction of its constituents in the affluence of material aid which they were placing at its disposal?

There was a moment of doubt—a single moment—that endangered the good intelligence which reigned between the patriots of Cuba and their representatives here; but even then, when the facts were explained, the Cubans were more than ever assured that the majority of the Junta was laboring to carry out their views and wishes, and confidence was perfectly reestablished.

It was part of the plan adopted by the chief and by Cuba that the latter should not pronounce before the arrival of the auxiliary forces, and that the interior organizations should be the charge of those who were at the head of the revolutionary labors in the country. In an evil hour, the Junta, at the suggestion of a member of the minority, consented to accept the services of some Cuban patriots about to return to their country, who offered to introduce arms, and even to raise men, in those places in which organizations were not yet established. This consent, however, was accompanied by an express prohibition to the parties of insurrectionary attempts, or any movement whatever, of that class, until they should receive directions from here or in Cuba. With this understanding, five or six commissions were signed—leaving blanks for their names—to be intrusted only to individuals possessing the guarantees of prudence and discretion, indispensable to the safe issue of the project. The author of the motion had charge of filling up the blanks, and of impressing upon the persons he selected the necessary instructions. Whether these were not given in the spirit and letter of the agreement, as some of the parties admitted before they left, or whether they were not understood—which is difficult to believe—it is certain that on their arrival in Cuba, some of them gave such publicity to their mission that fear, discontent and confusion were scattered among the patriots, weakening the prestige of the Junta, and disturbing the concert which had hitherto attended all its relations with its co-laborers in Cuba. A communication to the Junta, couched in the most clear, feeling and energetic terms, was the fruit of this measure, in which, through a spirit of conciliation, which the circumstances seemed to demand, the Junta had departed from the settled determination not to take any step independent of the stipulations of the contract. It could not foresee the perverted turn that would be given to its acquiescence, and still less the advantage which would be taken of it to promote plans of their own, which now began to appear in all their nakedness. The Junta had not long to wait for the confirmation of its fears, and to repeat still more deeply its want of prevision; for while it was stationed at the South it heard with astonishment that the young and heroic Don FRANCISCO ESTRAMPES had sailed from New-York to Buracoa, charged not only with arms to introduce, but with a mission to collect what force he could, and provoke a premature and ill-advised insurrection. His nomination, his instructions, and the responsibility of the tragic end of this daring patriot, rest not with the Junta. It repeats that fact in the face of the world, even though it is superabundantly denied by the explicit and reiterated declarations of the immolated victim. Never, if it had known it, would the Junta have sanctioned an election which of itself was a violation of the terms and intent of the agreement; never would it have tacitly have consented to his departure, if it had have subscribed for him, or any one, the instructions and projects intrusted to him, in such manifestation to the established contract, and the breach of which was spreading dismay throughout Cuba, and arousing the then unsuspecting government to the most energetic precautions. The daring, decision and enthusiasm of the unfortunate ESTRAMPES were too well known to the Junta to permit it to solicit or even to the discharge of a mission in the very hours impossible with these brilliant endowments. On others, then, not on the Junta, rests the responsibility of this unnecessary sacrifice, and of the evils which flowed from it to the cause.

But to return to the operations here: all the effective means which the chief, in his dual capacitation, had indispensable to undertaking the desired movement, were ready, and the Junta had full right to insist that every one should now fulfil his respective engagements. It is just to say the chief was not slow in this matter; and the preparations he arranged, the incessant commerce he made, and all the efforts he put in motion for the enterprise, evinced a determination to act with promptitude. But we must also say that he encountered after this period hours heavily on the chief, for even though some had shown had previously evinced distrust, were again reposed, it is equally true that never had the other party manifested a better disposition, or taken more effective measures to remove every cause of dispute. Unimaginable of this, would the chief have contracted those large responsibilities which afterwards absorbed so considerable a portion of the resources of the revolution? Does it not prove that he considered himself consciously the master of all, when he made these human sacrifices?

In truth he did not always give suitable directions, nor provide his agents with the funds necessary for their errands, and these circumstances were frequently obliged to have recourse to the Treasurer of the Junta for customs, emolument and personal items, although he had resigned his office and withdrawn from that body. Thus in defiance of active and competent agents the chief himself perpetuated that intervention, direct or indirect, in the control of the materials and effects of the enterprise which had been the constant source of the best suspicions and discords.

The Junta, however, could not believe—nor even now can it think—that the head of the enterprise looked at this particular the capacity and resolution which distinguished all his other operations. A desire to constitute—to which the Junta on its part was always inclined—and the necessity or convenience of availing himself of the cooperation of one who was rendering valuable services, sufficiently explains what would otherwise seem culpable negligence or intentional abandonment.

The timeliness for the movement had arrived at last, and it was necessary to use it or suffer enormous loss, through the contracts before alluded to, when the melancholy tidings came from Havana, which were soon converted into the bloody focus of the Spanish tyranny of the Spanish Government. In treading this delicate ground the Junta trends to the possession of every Cuban to comprehend the obligation of their representatives here to observe the most prudent reserve on the men and things that prepared and consummated those fatal events.

To return to their origin, the Junta has data and documents, which, published at a proper time, will show to what extremes the stimulus of personal ambition and a blind devotion to their own opinions can hurry men who direct the policy of nations. At present it can only be said that a favorable and full concurrence of evidence helped the iniquitous power that rules in Cuba to an opportunity to satiate its instinct for blood, to boast of its foresight, and of the justice and efficiency of its measures, and at the same time place itself in a formidable state of defence.

The false declarations of a villain loaded with crimes and infamy—testimony which would be rejected in any civilized society—were the only basis for the acts of ferocity and persecution with which that Government has again stained the history of Spanish domination in America.

The Junta solemnly declares before God and the whole world that the horrible project of murder and assassination in which it was pretended the revolution in our country was to be opened, is the baseless falsehood of those black machinations which carried to the scaffold the noble Spaniard, Don RAMON PINTO. The whole plan the informer pretended to reveal, and was seized upon there and proclaimed by a venal press, with all the additions and perversions that fear and malice could inspire, is the most wicked and cowardly invention that ever figured in a political process. Nevertheless it has been believed and published, contrary to the evidence of facts, that the discovery of this fictitious combination was the most direct blow aimed at our enterprise. Oh! that the enemies were correct, for then we should be spared these painful explanations. What is true in all this is, that if a liberating expedition had landed in the country at that critical moment, there could be no doubt it would have won an easy victory in the midst of the fear and confusion of which the surprised and disconcerted tyrant gave so many evidences. Unfortunately, the most important preparations were not then sufficiently advanced, and at this date the enterprise had received in this country serious and unexpected checks, which it is not proper to reveal here, and whose removal caused new and important delays.

It is easy to comprehend the bitter regret with which the Junta saw successive obstacles arise, which it could not obviate, while on the other hand the general anxiety increased, and the clamors and demands of the impatient gained new energy. Passion and injustice do not respect facts and circumstances. Could the Junta do otherwise, in such times, than sustain and forward to the utmost of its power the prompt realization of a plan already so far advanced and so earnestly expected? Ought it distrust the reiterated pledges of a chief whose honor and reputation were so closely identified with the consummation and success of our enterprise?

Were not all our resources employed in preparing for the only movement possible at the time? And was not this the critical instant in which, casting away prejudices and suspicions, we should have united as one man to conquer external impediments, and spring to the rescue of our bleeding mother-land? Unhappily this was not done; but that the majority of the Junta exhausted every means to accomplish it, is one of those facts which rest on the highest amount of written and irrefutable proofs.

Just then the chief had occasion to make a visit to the seat of government, though as yet we must be silent on his ostensible object. The Junta must, however, call attention to the apparently unimportant incident, for whether by mere coincidence, or by a more intimate and inexplicable relation, it is connected with the grave occurrences about to be related.

In effect, on the return of the chief from the capital, the Junta observed, for the first time, something reserved and indirect in his language, which it then attributed to the natural anxiety of one who foresaw great obstacles to be overcome, but in no manner imputed it to a change of sentiment with respect to the urgency of the work with which he was charged. It could not believe this, since, perhaps, never before had he given better pledges of his capacity and resolution to accomplish his engagements as now, when he had at his immediate command those material means which his agents at the North ought, by that time, to have controlled without reference to any other intervention. Unforeseen and unavoidable accidents had retarded them, and the Junta now began to fear some misfortune. While the chief, on his part, recommenced those doubts and distrusts, which he appeared to cherish more than ever, although the cause of this prolonged anxiety and the disturbance had at last disappeared.

This was the decisive moment. Now was brought to the test the fortitude, the acuteness, and the energy of him who had assumed the responsibility of carrying liberty to Cuba, and it is easier to imagine than describe the anxiety with which the Junta awaited the measures the chief should adopt, when it learned, with surprise, through a written communication, afterwards verbally confirmed and amplified, that under pretext of legal accountabilities—which had never assailed him before, and which he could readily have pre-arranged—he refused to take possession of the effects; that he expressed himself with slight monetary responsibility, for which he ought to have provided when he transmitted his orders, or had the courage to accept, since it only required his personal guaranty for an insignificant portion; that he excused himself on the plea of new fears of the reliability of the expected delivery of the effects by one who had already complied with his engagements, and who was at that time giving the most unequivocal proofs of disinterested generosity and abnegation; that he shrunk from the duty of meeting the obligations contracted by his orders and agreements, and put upon the Junta this charge, although he had in his own hands the totality of the funds which Cuban patriotism had renewed, with augmentations, as many times as he had changed and increased his estimates; and finally that he declared his intention to indefinitely procrastinate the enterprise, assigning for it his intimate conviction that it would meet the most active and determined opposition from the American Government—as if he had not repeatedly asserted that should never be an obstacle to detain him—as if then, or ever, there was any thought of violating the law—or as if it was probable that any administration would at any time give its consent.

The Junta cannot understand how the Chief can vindicate this sudden desertion, or this unexpected change in what was but yesterday a fixed and definitive resolution, but it is certain that his conduct at that solemn and critical moment was the destruction of all our cherished hopes, that it annihilated an immense quantity of resources accumulated at a heavy cost; for the third time reduced the salvation of Cuba to a problem, and placed the Junta in the most desperate of all the painful positions it has had to encounter in the discharge of its laborious mission.

It was indeed destined to drain to the dregs the bitter cup of deception, and there now remains to it no alternative but to present this sad statement of its unmerited disappointment. Let the chief answer: Is this what Cuba had the right to expect from his pledges, from the engagements and obligations he had contracted with him, with his compatriots, with the whole world? Are the hopes of an entire people to be excited only to be mocked thus? Is it for this the sacrifices were stimulated and the heroism excited which the Cuban revolutionists displayed on such a grand scale and so fruitlessly? Will the chief perchance seek to vindicate himself by appealing to the differences, oppositions and embarrassments which doubtless were thrown in his way? Why, if he had not the talent and resolution to overpower them, did he not stop the undertaking at the proper time, instead of waiting until there remained not the shadow of a hope that the Cubans could owe their liberty to the courage and leadership of an American chief? The abnegation and enthusiasm of a LOPEZ was not demanded of him, but some sincerity and consistency was certainly to be expected of the man who for eighteen months had demonstrated on himself the hopes and expectations of a people worthy of a better fate. In the presence of incentives and considerations of such magnitude the Junta will not pause to reproach him on its own account with the relative conditions in which he maintained it to the last moment, nor with the steady support and faithful cooperation which it unchangeably lent him, to the injury of its credit and popularity with a good portion of its compatriots. What could, or ought, the Junta to have done in the critical emergency? Remain in the attitude of the contract, and withdraw its confidence on the free evidence that neither the noble, nor his ideas, nor his fidelity, nor his devotion, were of the height required by the destiny of Cuba, and the legitimate ambition of all her children? The Junta cannot, at the time given, will say whether the Junta would, or ought to, have acted on this resolution. Even supposing the knowledge of what it has only been obtained, sure and reliable data, cause the Junta to rightly break a solemn pact, among, as it did, on the other side, the danger of exposing the country to renewed and painful experiences, through the same previous and fervent confidence that relying to make subsidy, and which would not have the courage this time the genius and influence of another Lopez to the direction.

The easy resignation of the chief to resignation, on his part, of intervention in a cause in which alone he appeared to be so much identified, is the subject of the gloomy reflection to the Junta. Perhaps his respect and fervence in the capital had postponed the plan for the anticipated resolution. Perhaps the hopes of Cuba not been there cautioned to conditionate of patriotism and subordination, as to the strictest requirements of American policy—was the man now invested with executive power comprehended it. It would not be the first time the destiny of our unfortunate Cuba, in every way so worthy of liberty, has been immolated in that city to long years and generous hopes.

The Junta emits simple conjectures without other basis than the remarkable coincidence of the events just related, and the mind is lost in making a solution more satisfactory and consistent with the reputation and antecedents of the man in whom is reposed an unlimited confidence.

Cubans! this is now the situation. Great resources lavishly exert cost; the moments which should contribute to the accomplishment of our enterprise dissolved; our enemies, joyful and triumphant for a result to which they had not the slightest part; your representatives assailed and rebuked; in revolutionary ranks the failure of the best combinations leads to such extremes.

The material loss is of great consideration, but until the Junta shall have received from the chief a proper statement, it cannot inform you of the exact extent. It cannot, without grave impropriety, deliver to publicity the figures and vouchers which otherwise it would be easy to offer in proof of the integrity of its management. The Junta must, therefore, limit itself to an invitation to all Cubans, without distinction, to come to its office, where they can freely examine the books and receive every desirable explanation.

At present, it can only be said in general terms that the funds which it received in New-York, before the powers were delegated to the chief, in May, 1854, were in part applied to the acquisition of war material for the enterprise, as may be seen by the treasurer's accounts. The other part, with about as much more, was expended by the treasurer in the arrangements demanded by the special project of which he had placed himself at the head. This account, as well as the former, was afterwards approved and the balance paid by the chief.

All the sums that came from the Island to the Junta, while it was stationed at New-Orleans, were delivered entire into the hands of the chief. Of them which, with his knowledge and sanction, were applied by the Junta to special expenses, there has been preserved a strict account, with vouchers.

The chief will duly account in time for the sums which were remitted directly to him from Cuba, as well as those which were collected by himself or his agents in the United States, of which the Junta does not know the amount, though it has reason to believe it is not important.

Much has been said of ruinous contracts, of exorbitant rewards, of great pecuniary recompenses, which were to be paid upon the triumph of our enterprise. They forget, in making these insinuations, that the rules of ordinary affairs cannot be applied to those whose very nature demands great stimulants and means unusual in proportion to the risks; but even so, and without pretending to enter into justifications which pertain to him who assumed, with the powers of the Junta, the general direction of the project, it must in justice declare that it has no reason to suspect the intentions or the rectitude of those who took part, directly or indirectly, in the costly preparations for the extraordinary work in progress.

The human mind, ever prone to distrust, exaggerated it when it sees the hopes frustrated and its most flattering calculations end in failure. These, however, are questions which cannot at present be agitated to our advantage. Simple justice requires that we should await the details and explanations which deceive on the chief, by the dissolution of his relations with the Cuban cause and with the body representing it, and which are yet pending and unfulfilled.

Before abandoning this unpleasant subject the brand of falsehood must be set upon the calumnies and inventions with which the Spanish press has attempted to blacken the character of our enterprise and the honor of the men who directed it. The distribution of Cuban lands and property among the expeditionists, the sackings and spoilings they announced as the incentives of our programme, never had a shade of life or reality except in the columns of those vile and mendacious editors. The Cubas are ruinous challenge them to present a single proof that it did not, in all and for all proceed with a strict regard to general rights and interests, and to the justice due the meanest of its inhabitants, of whatever class or condition.

The existing materials have been temporarily confided to the person whose practical knowledge, constant and intimate connection with the affair, and the direct interest which, as creditor, he has in its preservation and security, would indicate as the most suitable person to receive and faithfully deliver charge.

In coming to this determination, the Junta was governed by the advice of distinguished and impartial Cubans, as well as the pressing urgency in which it was placed, and the reiterated assurances that all past disagreement should be sacrificed on the altar of the country.

The Junta is now reduced to the three members who composed the majority, by the voluntary withdrawal, immediately after the disaster, of one of the four members which constituted the body at that time.

Your Junta has now stated the facts; it remains with you to declare the verdict. If to have obtained attention and concurrence in the plan which was considered most practicable for the liberation of Cuba; if to have elected a military chief, designated long in advance by public opinion, and by the unanimous vote of our heroic and ill-fated LOPEZ, as the most suitable man, by his antecedents and personal endowments, as well as the conservative interests he represented, and to have intrusted him with the powers and means at its disposal; if to have sustained this plan and this man against premature impatience and projects which public sentiment and former failures had already condemned; if to have sacrificed its repose and very often its personal feelings, to reestablish unity and the necessary harmony among all the elements it considered indispensable to the triumph of our cause; if to have inculcated by the press, by words, by every possible means, the true principles of our revolution, as they are professed by the immense majority of you, without fatal exaggerations or violent and unjustifiable exclusions; if all this and much more that your Junta has done to fulfil worthily the mission confided to it, must be imputed to it as a fault, because unforeseen events, deplorable discords, and, moreover, the inexplicable abnegation of the elected chief, have frustrated the plan, it submits to your judgment, and hopes that its desires and intentions will at least be saved from your censure.

There have been errors, there have been faults, there have been deceptions and misfortunes; but all is not lost, and you should fix your attention on the immense advance of the Cuban revolution; for tears and sacrifices are the aliment of revolutions. An occasion lost, large sums consumed without results—can this perchance decide the fate of Cuba? Her vitality and her destinies render the loss of time and of means, and perhaps a mysterious Providence has chosen them to direct in a better path the future of our mother-land.

Let us seek instructions for the future in the failures of the past. The Junta abstains from presenting new plans, for it considers this to be your exclusive province. It is easy to frame them here, far from the men and the interests they must necessarily affect; but it cannot be concealed from your penetration how urgent it is to emerge from the narrow field in which we have respired so many and such painful deceptions. It was not individuals alone with their passions and errors, that gave the death-blow to our former hopes. The Junta has proved in another writing, that principles were also accountable for our misfortunes. The flag of Cuba has been insufficient to win the liberty to which we aspire while planted on the exposed ground of the interests of the American people. The Cuban revolution, misunderstood and vilified by the European powers, on account of this connection, meets not per-plexity, while, on the other hand, indifference or hostility has been all the return we have received for our offerings to the great republic.

A new world of principles and alliances, more vast, more fruitful and more active, presents itself, and it belongs to you to make the election.

To you also, it pertains, and to you alone to decide what can best be done with regard to your misrepresentation abroad, in the way and form permitted by the exceptional condition of our country, and most adapted to serve its true interests.

A bitter and reiterated experience has demonstrated what grave dangers must ever arise from the absence of unity and concert in the labors of your delegates. Perhaps the powers and duties of your Junta have not been sufficiently defined. Between the simple mandatory of your orders, as those who now compose it have ever considered it, and an initiative and dictatorial power as others have supposed it, there reigns a difference wide enough to explain of itself the origin of former disagreements, and the part they bore in the wreck of our hopes.

It is important that these doubts and misinterpretations shall be settled at once and forever, that all of us expatriated here may know what part legitimately belongs to us to perform in the complicated web of our revolution. In this way, and no other, can we obtain the concert and uniformity which we so much need to ensure a triumph finally.

The Junta awaits your verdict on the past, and your resolution for the future; instantly accepting the first, whatever it may be, and praying that the second may accomplish the liberty and independence of our country.

NEW-YORK, Aug. 29, 1855. THE CUBAN JUNTA.

Neal Dow and the Ammunition.

The Portland papers publish the following letter of Mayor Dow:

MAYOR'S OFFICE, Sept. 7th, 1855.

To the Editor of the Advertiser:

SIR: My attention was called this morning to an article in the State of Maine of this date, in relation to certain muskets and ammunition which have been procured for the use of the police. A simple statement of the facts will set the matter in the proper light.

Immediately after the riot of June 3d, I was informed by an unbidden authority, that the instigators of the mob had threatened a renewal of the atrocious riot of Saturday night. On that occasion the authorities were greatly embarrassed for want of arms and ammunition, and by reason of that, the city was in possession of the mob for more than two hours. In order to place the government in a position to act promptly, if another riot should occur, I telegraphed to the Governor for a requisition on the Arsenal for 100 muskets and a quantity of ammunition. The requisition was granted, and two cases of them. Two requisition was granted and two cases of muskets (20 each) were brought to the police office, and arranged in a safe place for them. The ammunition was not procured, except a small part, but was returned to the Arsenal. This was on the 6th of June, the day of the meeting at the City Hall, which was called, as was thought, for the purpose of renewing the riot, and at which (Judge WELLS presiding) the renewal of the mob was openly threatened and the threat was loudly and universally applauded.

The muskets remain safely in the police office, and may be removed to-morrow, if we choose to do so; but we may, and fear them, we fear what, to be ready when it shall be necessary to maintain the peace of the city and to preserve law and order from the outrage of a mob. NEAL DOW.

Letter from Colonel Maxey on the Nicaragua Purchase.

We copy from the Mobile Tribune the following letter from Col. MAXEY to Capt. MAURY, his second in that city:

SAN JUAN DEL NORTE, Saturday, Aug. 18, 1855.

MY DEAR MAURY: I have just completed the purchase of Henry Malloney of some of the most magnificent country in the world—a country which, I believe in spirit, will before many months long, with the surprising and industrious genius of the United States and Europe. Messrs. SHAFFNER & HALY have disposed of their entire right, title and interest in the interested "Mosquito Grant" to me for $100,000, and I shall proceed at once to invite that enterprising capital to make the most of the immense resources of the country. There are three hundred miles of navigable rivers belonging to it, and further back are level and cultivated, healthy in climate and abundant of every thing, every people of the tropic or temperate zones. Sugar, cotton, tobacco, cochineal, cocoa, are produced in abundance, in addition to the substantial supplies of corn and rice required by the emigrants of a large population. Much of the land in the interior extends along the banks of the San Juan River—the navigable highway of a hundred miles, consequently, whatever produce can be shipped, without change of transportation, to any port on the globe.

I have put my mighty fortune in this living venture. The old Californians who have lately been by me say they are the best in the world, and a large number are to be sent for from their ranches. The country lies between Tuna and Toro, towards the southern boundary, which has been opened of late, to an amount, of account of the deep water, that steamships of the largest class can sail alongside and load up without further trouble.

I hope, therefore, that you and your friends may be early upon the ground, to share in the prospective advantages of this vast addition to the field of American enterprise.

Remember the home with which this is written, and believe me truly your friend, H. L. MAXEY.

Fraudulent Gas Speculations in Government Purchases.

From the Mobile Tribune, Sept. 7th.

We regret having to record a serious accident to the family of Mr. J. V. BARNES, of this city. Mr. B. has recently opened a store in the basement of his residence, at the corner of Aberdeen and John streets. Yesterday afternoon, about 4 o'clock, while Mr. THOMAS J. DANIELS, of the firm of HEARSEY & CO., was engaged in examining the gas pipe, an explosion took place, seriously injuring all the persons in the room. Mr. DANIELS was blown through the window, from which he was at work, breaking his right leg, in two places. Mrs. BARNES received a compound fracture of the right ankle, and sustained a bruised knee. Little was blown almost entirely to pieces, and parts of the house were driven out. It is thought amputation of the foot will be necessary. A child three years of age had its right leg and thigh badly fractured, one eye entirely destroyed, and the side of its face and head badly lacerated, besides several contusions on other parts of the body.

Mrs. BARNES, senior, had her ankle fractured and sustained other injuries. A servant girl was somewhat cut and bruised, but had no bones broken.

The interior of the store was a complete wreck. All the goods were scattered in various directions, and the shelves broken and well thrown down. The floor of the room above was blown down in pieces. The noise of the explosion was distinctly heard at the Exchange, a distance of fully half a mile.

Drs. SCHLEY, BURDOSH, WEST, BYRNE, FIST and COLDING attended the sufferers.

The child died about 11 o'clock last night. At that time Mr. DANIELS and the elder Mrs. BARNES were doing well. The younger Mrs. B. was somewhat more comfortable, although suffering great pain. We are gratified to learn that the attending physicians entertain hopes of saving the limb.

The cause of this sad disaster is involved in mystery, and many opinions in regard to it have been expressed. From the information we have been able to obtain, we are inclined to believe that it was caused by the escape of gas under the floor, which becoming ignited by the light used by Mr. DANIELS while examining for a leak in the pipe. Whatever may have been the cause of the explosion, the occurrence is one that calls for a thorough investigation. We understand that the pipe used in the building had been examined to the usual in

LATER ACCOUNTS FROM VIRGINIA.

NO GRAVE-BOX IN NORFOLK.

Dr. Hosack on Yellow Fever.

The telegraph yesterday brought us the latest intelligence from Norfolk, as follows:

BALTIMORE, Tuesday, Sept. 11.

At Norfolk, on Sunday, there were forty deaths from the fever, and a considerable diminution in the number of new cases.

At Portsmouth, on Sunday, there were six deaths.

Drs. HOSPITAL and PERITT, of Baltimore; Dr. CHANCELLOR, of Philadelphia; Dr. SMITH, of Columbia, Pa.; and Drs. GOODE and MUNN, of Rockingham, are dead. Mr. BARTON, of Norfolk, is also dead.

The fever has broken out at Suffolk, fifteen miles from Portsmouth, and the people are flying panic stricken.

Yellow Fever in Mobile.

From the Mobile Advertiser, 8th.

The Board of Health make public announcement that there is no yellow fever in the city, or rather of one having occurred by it this season.

There are 11 families, all far removed from the city, and are looked upon in case of native origin, or at least without intercourse with imported cases.

Quarantine at Mobile—The Spread of Yellow Fever.

From the Mobile Advertiser, Sept. 5.

Never within our knowledge of Mobile have we been free of fever for so long a period when it was raging to any extent in New-Orleans, and if we are violent in this matter we do it with the distinct view of contributing to predicting for our health regulations are imperfect or sufficiently carried out. We do not like to think there is any reason to anticipate the introduction of the fever here, but we desire to impress upon the persons to whom the important trust of guarding the city in this particular has been committed the necessity of rigorously and impartially enforcing the regulations as they exist. Nothing short of this will or ought to satisfy the public. We know that the office of Quarantine Physician is a laborious and responsible one, for if by any inattention or indifference on his part the fever should be introduced from abroad into the city, he will be held to a strict account therefor by the people who confide in and cheerfully furnish the means to sustain him in his station.

The yellow fever got into the city last year (it is believed) through the inefficiency of the regulations or the neglect to adhere to them rigidly, and though it did not spread much, and was generally light, we presume few of our readers would welcome another visit, even of that sort, especially when there is less occasion for it now than then.

Liberal Workmen.

From the Washington Star.

The hands employed on the Washington Aqueduct contributed the sum of $250 for the Portsmouth and Norfolk sufferers. Some who receive but a dollar a day for their honest toil, or laborers, contributed, each, three dollars to this philanthropic object.

No Small-Pox.

The Baltimore Patriot declares that the small-pox rumors are untrue. It says:

"Our informant believes that the report in relation to the existence of the small-pox in Norfolk is incorrect; and his belief is not by any means based upon a more favorable view of the city than the unfortunate neighbors will be apt to ascribe the providence having them of full second enough."

Undertakers' Work.

Special Correspondence of the Richmond Dispatch.

NORFOLK, Thursday, Sept. 6, 1855.

There have been up to this time, from the commencement of the epidemic, 800 deaths. O'BRIEN & GRAY further report the last six days 186! Other undertakers have had their share, and the greatest proportion of deaths have occurred within the last three weeks. Two or three days this week rid up the list fearfully—40 and 50 burials in one day, does not take long to convert go to graveyard.

The Relief Association is constantly receiving home from country abroad, requesting the officers to look over their servants, (the lazy blacks when they left behind,) and see that they do not suffer for want of provisions, medical attendance, &c., but not a dime on hand—many of them rich in this world's goods, and can well afford to pay for the aid they expect from the Association for their services. Some they have had upon "the clemency" to only improvident, for, to "feed, pig, or die." One of those "whole-souled," liberal gents writes, that as the contributions to the Relief and Association are made for the benefit of the people of Norfolk, he trusts that his servant will be allowed as much meat, bread, &c., as will sufficiently support her during his absence! And this man is wealthy, and yet has not contributed one cent towards the relief of the destitute widows, orphans and sick of his native city! The Association intend to make a public report of these letters, with the names of the writers, in order that, after the fatal scourge will have passed away, those some highly valued and humanizing documents may be satisfied.

Dr. Hosack on Yellow Fever.

The following is from the forthcoming number of Dr. HOSACK's American Medical Gazette:

"Seldom have the pestilence that walketh in darkness' so fearfully and fatally raged in any portion of our country, as in the violentest of the yellow fever this season, in Norfolk, Va., and its immediate vicinity. And never before has the public sympathy been called upon to such an extent in behalf of the sufferers, alike in the North as in the South, illustrating the strength of the ties of brotherhood which indissolubly unite our common country, and presenting examples of public benevolence, and personal self-sacrifice, highly honorable to the humanity of our professional capability, and to the American people. * * *

A full history of this pestilence in Virginia will doubtless be forthcoming from some of the medical men who may survive, until which time it does not become us to attempt to speak authoritatively as to its cause, the nature of its extension and fatality, its peculiarities, or the comparative merits of the variety of treatment to which a resort has been had during the panic. Indeed, there is good and sufficient ground to apprehend that no good, but rather much evil, has resulted from much that has been published in the newspapers already on all these topics. The speculations which allege importation as its only source, and contagion as the means of its propagation, are much to be deplored, as diverting attention from the local sources of malignant contamination, which may be traced, discovered and removed, before another board, first of health, and then of health of public health. Moreover, they tend to endanger a false confidence in quarantine regulations, which history and experience as well as science, all prove, are not reliable. The temperature of the atmosphere in New-York and Philadelphia as in Baltimore, during the past Summer, has not been high enough continuously to develop the poison, and to the one exemption is due, far more than to the vigilance of health officers; and so of many other places, which else might have been visited.

No fact is better established than that the sick with yellow fever, when removed to a healthy atmosphere, cannot propagate the malady. The attempt to create a panic, the offspring of the business of the development of the disease in persons who have been exposed to the epidemic, after their removal to other and distant places, deserves the severest reprehension.

Quarantine, therefore, against the persons hailing from infected places, whether sick or well, is a barbarous as well as useless imposition, for which ignorance is the basis; and any pecuniary forfeiture or fee exacted from such persons, by officials or otherwise, merits the penalties against obtaining money under false pretences. Such local restrictions against persons coming from infected places, on which yellow fever has appeared, or from the haste of which, when opened, the pestilence maintain may escape, and contaminate our transports, are very proper, for all such vessels are in the only rational protest for the cleanliness of the system.

No less to be deplored have been the incidental effects, made through the public press, to create the impression that the malady so fatal in Norfolk, &c., is not the yellow fever, but some other and more fatal pestilence, as the African fever, the plague, &c. From reliable sources we take it upon ourselves to say that the disease in Virginia is neither more nor less than pel ow fever, and differs in no respect in its phases or mortality, from that fever as it prevails in New-Orleans and other cities at the South, during the Summer months. The family record of the inhabitants from the infected districts may have suggested the mortality, especially among the physicians and public officers whose duties kept them nightly exposed to the poison; but we fear from the loss of certain practitioners we have seen, that the want of success in treating the malady may have partly arisen from "the expectant treatment" or the do-nothing system of medical practice, so highly eulogized by certain letter-writers for the press.

We speak as a witness, rather than as a disputant, when we say, that familiar by with the yellow fever many years since in Southern city, embracing our conviction that no form of "expectant treatment" ever designed, can adequately arrest the inflammatory and congestive pathological state, which quickly supervenes in well characterized yellow fever. When the epidemic is over and the truth comes out from reliable sources, as it assuredly will, this "expectant treatment" will have its sample written by the records of the dead. Not that rash or violent practice are called for, but active medicines, prescribed to the urgency of each individual case, will be found to have been essential, when early and loyal and judiciously administered.

We cannot close this desultory article without expressing our disgust from the pragmatical conceit of certain charlatans, who have sought to profit a public panic, by vague and unwarranted surmises that the yellow fever has not reached Norfolk this year in travelling North and we expected to hear contradicts in Baltimore, Philadelphia and New-York, notwithstanding the arrival of many vessels sent hence. If the authorities of the profession were reliable sources, or if

It will be recollected that a few days since the managers of the house of Refuge, in Baltimore, tendered that building to the President of the United States for the accommodation of the troops at Fort Monroe, if the President would consent to allow the people of Portsmouth and Norfolk to go there until all traces of the yellow fever had departed. That arrangement failed of success, and the matter dropped. On Monday morning (says the American,) a Committee of gentlemen from Norfolk, composed of John B. Whitehead, Esq., President pro tem., of the Common Council; J. I. Bloodgood, Esq., Vice-President of the Howard Association; William T. Henderson, Esq., Sergeant of the City, and D. D. Stevens, Esq., called on Dr. GRAVES, to request the use of the House of Refuge for the accommodation of the orphans until the abatement of the fever. The board of trustees was consulted, and its assent at once obtained.

The Ladies.

In this connection, says the Baltimore American, we will state that the ladies of this city have formed themselves into societies, and already they have begun the work of charity in the preparation of clothing for the parentless. On Monday a number of ladies assembled at the Methodist Episcopal Church in Broadway, each prepared with goods, and went to work in earnest. We learn that in almost every part of the city the same thing was done. If this spirit is generally manifested there is no doubt but there will be a good supply of clothing ready to be sent down to the orphans by Wednesday evening, and they will probably reach here on Saturday or Sunday morning.

Physicians.

Dr. WM. HENRY FREEMAN, of Philadelphia, who has rendered such noble service in the afflicted city of Norfolk, and who passed through Baltimore on Friday morning last on his way home for a few days' recreation, returned to Norfolk on Monday in the steamer Georgia. During his absence from home the highly honorable and responsible position of Professor of Chemistry in the Wagner Institute of Philadelphia was conferred upon him. The doctor states that his heart is wholly with the distressed and his hand open to relieve them. Dr. F. E. B. HIGGINS and Dr. MOORE, of this city, also went down; the latter to nurse Dr. MORRIS, should it be necessary. Dr. DE CASTRO also re-turned yesterday afternoon.

We learn from Dr. FREEMAN that Dr. HIGGINS, of Norfolk, who passed through Baltimore last week, having just recovered from an attack of the fever, on his way to Philadelphia, had a relapse in that city, accompanied by the black vomit, and expired on Saturday last.

The Washington Committee.

HAMPTON, Friday, Sept. 7.

The returning Committee from Washington arrived this morning.

The Committee speak in the highest and warmest terms of the meeting they had with the Mayor and President of the Board of Health of the city of Baltimore on the evening of their return from Washington.

These gentlemen also met with the refugees at the meeting at BARNUM's yesterday morning, and offered to cooperate and furnish "material aid" in money, provisions, tents, or anything else. Truly, Baltimore is a noble city, and the Mayor and the members of the Board of Health sterling and noble gentlemen. As each one it was known to Mr. N. FALLS, Esq., the President of the Baltimore Steam Packet Company, that one of the objects of the mission of the committee was to procure the removal of the good people of Norfolk and Portsmouth, he promptly and courteously offered to place at the service of the sufferers two of his large steamers to transport them without fee or reward to the place decided upon for location.

I regret to say that Mr. FERGUSON, one of the officers of the Norfolk Custom-House, is very low to-night at Barnum's Hotel, in Hampton, with the fever. He will probably be dead before this reaches you.

Miss MARY JONES, sister of the late Passed Midshipman JONES, and daughter of Mrs. W. JONES, of Norfolk (both latter deceased with fever,) is also lying ill at the same hotel with the disease. Should this young and beautiful lady fall a victim, she will make the fifth member of this interesting family who have gone to the grave within less than a fortnight.

The congregations of churches will be moving panoramas of funeral drapery, and the tone of recognition when friend meets friend will sound as hollow as the first handful of fresh earth cast upon a coffin. And this last word reminds me of a portion of the freight of the Louisiana last night, on her downward trip. There were barrels of bread and crackers, and boxes of candles and lemons, and other things to sustain and cheer life among the stricken ones—and one hundred and fifty coffins, all for Norfolk and Portsmouth. Thirty of these were a present from a kind hearted undertaker in Baltimore. God bless him for his generosity; but only think of such a present—a present of thirty COFFINS!

A dispatch from Weldon, in the Richmond American, dated on Sunday evening, says that the residents of Norfolk and Portsmouth were leaving on Sunday morning for "Camp Pillow," the encampment established near the Old Fort Comfort by the Mayor and Council of Baltimore, and would doubtless occupy the tents in great numbers.

General WILLIAM H. WHITEHEAD left Weldon on Sunday morning, with a car load of provisions, being his third trip with a full freight for the suffering cities.

The accounts of the fever spreading in the interior is incorrect. The only cases that have occurred are among the refugees.

Gleams of Hope.

The following postscript to a business letter, from a highly respectable merchant of Norfolk, written on Saturday afternoon to a large mercantile house of Baltimore, contains a gleam of better tidings: "There is some reduction in the mortality of our city, and the number of new cases have much diminished."

Baltimore Charity.

Meetings of the citizens of several of the wards were held in Baltimore on Monday, on which occasion they were divided into blocks, and committees appointed to call upon every citizen therein to swell up the aggregate offering. It was a pleasing sight at the City Hall to see little children voluntarily come forward and leave clothing. And such clothing, too; much of it was new, and of the finest quality.

Total amount $97,002

Five thousand dollars have been remitted to Portsmouth and Norfolk to-day, which, with the sums previously sent, make the whole amount of remittances by this Committee to date, $14,500.

The following is a copy of a letter this day received:

OFFICE OF THE NEW-YORK AND VIRGINIA STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

NEW-YORK, Tuesday, Sept. 11, 1855.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your note of this morning, we beg leave to say that we will send ELLEN WALLACE (the nurse who goes out to attend the sufferers in Norfolk) as far as Old Point Comfort free of charge; from thence she can get to Norfolk without difficulty. We have already sent out a number of physicians and nurses, and should there be others who wish to go forward on the same errand of mercy we will be pleased to grant them free passage by either of the steamships Jamestown or Roanoke, on Wednesday and Saturday of each week. We are, truly, &c.,

LUDLAM & PLEASANTS.

To WM. H. MACY, Esq., Treasurer.

Three nurses and one physician have been sent to Norfolk to-day. W. H. MACY, Treasurer.

Nearly $100,000 Contributed.

The contributions forwarded to Norfolk are:

Baltimore	$21,500	Newark, N. J.	$1,500

Movements in Boston.

Boston has forwarded $2,800 to the sufferers. The collection is still going on; ALPHEUS HARDY, Esq., being the principal worker.

Movements in Providence.

At Providence, R. I., a Relief Committee has been formed, and $1,000 transmitted to the Norfolk sufferers. Mayor SMITH is Chairman of the Committee.

Baltimore's Share.

Our citizens have not only given their money freely, but have contributed a large number of coffins, and a considerable quantity of broadcloth, clothing, &c. These are exclusive of the $21,500 in cash.

Ice from New-Haven.

New-Haven, Conn., has sent a cargo of 200 tons of pure ice, which will, no doubt, prove a very acceptable donation at the present time. Richmond has also contributed horses for the physicians, and provisions for the destitute and sick.

Cabins near Richmond.

The Richmond American says:—We understand that a sufficiency of lumber has been procured and forwarded to "Sharp's Farm," about 12 miles below this city, on James River, where workmen have been engaged putting up comfortable cabins for the accommodation of those citizens of Norfolk and Portsmouth who can leave.

Cape May Relief.

Mr. WOOLMAN, proprietor of the Mount Vernon Hotel at Cape May, has tendered, through the Chairman of the late meeting held at the Exchange the use of that immense building as a refuge for the sufferers at Norfolk and Portsmouth.

The Fever Coming Here on Shipboard.

Our Marine Reporter sends the following:

The ship Charles Cooper, from Mobile for Europe, is below, with Captain COOPER sick of yellow fever. She will put into this this port for medical assistance. She was spoken yesterday by the steamer Huntress, Capt. MORRELL, fifty miles S. S. E. of Sandy Hook.

THE PROHIBITORY LAW.

RIGHT OF TRIAL BY JURY.

JUSTICE STUART'S DECISION.

James Wallace's Case Ordered to the General Sessions.

COURT OF SPECIAL SESSIONS OF THE PEACE.

BY JUDGE STUART.

The People vs. James Wallace.—The accused is before this Court upon a complaint preferred at the Second District Police, charging him with having a old half a gill of rye whisky, in violation of the "Act for the prevention of intemperance, pauperism and crime."

The case was returned to the Special Sessions, in pursuance of the following section of the "Act to enlarge the jurisdiction of the Courts of General and Special Sessions of the Peace, in and for the City and County of New York," the accused not having elected to be tried by the Court of General Sessions, at the time fixed for him to do so:

"The Court of General Sessions of the Peace in and for the City and County of New-York, shall have power to hear, determine and punish, according to law, all complaints for misdemeanors, and shall possess exclusive jurisdiction thereof, unless the said Court of Special Sessions shall order any such complaint to be sent to the Court of General Sessions of the Peace; and unless the accused, when arrested and brought before the committing magistrate, shall elect to have his case heard and determined by the Court of General Sessions of the Peace in and for the City and County of New-York; and it is hereby made the duty of such magistrate, upon such arrest, to inform the said accused of the provisions of this section."

When the case was called for trial the defendant appeared with counsel, Messrs. Tomlinson and Taylor, and demanded to be tried by a Jury of twelve men. While the statute just read gives (with the exceptions therein made) the Court of Special Sessions of the Peace, exclusive jurisdiction of all MISDEMEANORS—and any violation of the provisions of the Prohibitory Act, is by that act declared to be so—it confers no power to empannel a Jury; and as there never has been any trials by jury in this Court, and clearly cannot be, it is obviously impossible that the accused can be tried at this bar in the manner he demands. In view of these facts, I am asked to exercise the discretion conferred by the Act of April 12, and send the complaint to the Court of General Sessions; and this is required, first, for the reason that Wallace mistook his rights and the effect of his election when before the Police Justice; and, second, and mostly upon the ground that, being charged with a criminal offence, he has a constitutional right to be tried by a common law Jury of the country—such as the General Sessions and Oyer and Terminer only have the right to empannel; and further, that he can avail himself of that right at any time—even up to the moment the first witness for the people is sworn, any act of the Legislature to the contrary, notwithstanding.

Mr. Cayton, of counsel for the prosecution, denied my position; said the case came into the General Sessions, and disputed the right of the defendant to a jury, he having failed under the law in the case provided to secure that right in the manner prescribed.

These questions having been argued at length by counsel on the one side and the other, and being both before and now without any doubts in the matter, I will determine them in as brief a manner as possible: Has the accused, being charged with the perpetration of a misdemeanor, a constitutional right to be tried by a jury—even although the Legislature has otherwise declared—except upon certain conditions, which the defendant failed to observe, and which, therefore, do not now avail him?

Art. 1, sec. 2 of the Constitution of this State provides that "The right of trial by jury in all cases in which it has heretofore been used, shall remain inviolate forever." The simple and only question then is: In what cases has it heretofore been used? That it has ever been used in all cases of felony is certain. Is it equally true in respect to misdemeanors? Has it upon principle and by force of law and usage, ever been regarded as the settled policy of the State in the administration of its criminal justice that misdemeanors as well as felonies should be subjects of trial by juries—all practice by special or local Courts to the contrary being exceptions to the rule? By reference from our present to the next preceding constitution (1821) it will be found that section 2d of article 7th is the same as the section I have read from the present organic law of the State. The act however entitled "Of the rights of the citizens and inhabitants of this State," known as the "Bill of Rights," passed in 1827, declaratory of certain fundamental principles of liberty and justice, and of Federal and State constitutional provisions—being a compilet-on from them and from an analogous act of the Legislature in 1787, "Concerning the rights of the citizens of this State," contains not only a provision the same as our present and preceding constitutions, but still another section, securing the right of trial by jury, which is in the following language: "IN ALL criminal prosecutions the accused has a right to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury." (Sec. 14.) The argument that this bill of rights is but an act of the Legislature and may be affected by any subsequent act, is admitted, but answered by the fact that in its import, essence and spirit, it is infinitely more important, sacred and enduring, than any other act, being the solemn recognition by the Legislature of those great truths and principles that are the foundation of right and only, but which underlie the framework of our Government. Passing to the first Constitution of the State, (1777,) we find the forty-first section to be in these words: "And this Convention doth further ordain, &c., that trial by jury in all cases in which it has heretofore been used in this colony of New-York shall remain inviolate forever." From Europe.

By the simultaneous arrival of the Africa at Halifax, and the Arago at this port, we are in possession of one week's later intelligence from Europe. The war news is quite unimportant, and almost destitute of interest. Nothing more attempted in the Baltic, and "affairs before Sebastopol still unchanged." We have no indication as to when the next bombardment will be commenced, nor even any authority for believing that it will ever be renewed at all. Since newspaper correspondents are no longer allowed to pry into the secrets of war councils, and cannot therefore transmit any reliable information from the camp, we are forced to remain in ignorance of the progress of the siege or the plans for future operations. PELISSIER is as silent as the tomb, and the Invalide Russe is equally taciturn. It is fair, however, to infer, from the ominous mystery that envelops the movements of the Allied Generals, that some important movement is contemplated.

The Arago brings details of the late Russian attack on the Tchernaya. We publish elsewhere a full and graphic description of the battle, with all its exciting scenes and incidents. These accounts confirm previous reports that a decisive victory was obtained by the Allies. Another attack, it is said, was anticipated at the cemetery, and every preparation was being made to resist it. The whole history of the campaign proves that the Russians are unable to compete with their enemy in a fair field. If, therefore, the latter has the superior advantage of earthworks and entrenchments, an assault, if made, would, beyond all question, be as great a failure as the recent affair on the Tchernaya. It is not unlikely that the Russian General has assumed the offensive in the hope that by a coup de main he may relieve himself from the embarrassment of a deficiency in his supplies or, perhaps, avert the long threatened assault upon Sebastopol. If Winter should again set in, and the attitude of the belligerents continue unchanged, the Malakoff and Redan would then, in all probability, remain Russian fortresses for at least another year.

The general news by this arrival is not important. QUEEN VICTORIA and suite left Boulogne on the night of the 27th ult., and arrived in England the following morning.

The Liverpool Cotton Market had not varied since the departure of the Atlantic. Breadstuffs were dull. Consols closed at 91.

The Last Gasp of Fillibusterism.

The past year has been a most unpropitious one for the cause of revolution and national independence. But a short time ago and the whole world seemed to be imbued with a spirit of revolt; at least wherever a tyrannical government oppressed the people, there was a fiery resolve to strike bravely for freedom. But the excitement is now all over, and the oppressed people seem to have come to the conclusion that liberty and free government are not worth fighting for, and have quietly submitted themselves to their destiny. CHARLES GAVAN DUFFY, the dust of the Young Ireland party, has left his native land in disgust and gone in quest of fortune in freer countries. Ireland, for the first time in her history, appears to be perfectly quiet and resigned to her condition; there is not an agitator left in the Emerald Isle. We publish on another page the manifesto of the Cuban Junta, addressed to the people of Cuba, explaining the causes of the failure of the attempts to revolutionize and emancipate Cuba from the rule of the Spanish Crown. The manifesto possesses a good deal of interest for all who have felt any sympathy with the cause of Cuban Independence, and will be found full of profitable suggestion for those who have a hankering to engage in similar enterprises. The Junta do not abandon the cause for which they have labored so fruitlessly, but bravely hope still to see Cuba freed from Spanish tyranny. But their manifesto may be regarded as the last gasp of an undertaking which, at one time, seemed to promise the elements of success. But the manifesto expores very fully and clearly the errors and blunders, the mistakes and the inherent weakness of the organization, and furnishes a superfluity of reasons for its breaking down. It is a sad narrative of misapplied energy and wasted wealth. The Junta are desirous of showing where the errors were engendered, and who was to blame for the failure, as well as to clear themselves from the imputation of having accelerated the ruin of their cause. The whole case lies in a very small compass, they had an inefficient "Chief," and they lacked unity of sentiment and action, which would have been sufficient to ruin a much stronger cause than that of Cuban Independence appears ever to have been.

The journal of the decision of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, in substance by Mr. Justice BLACK, in the WILLIAMSON case, cannot fail to impress the reader's mind with certain particulars deserving especial note. We do not allude to the grotesque humor, that ghastly levity, those sportive flights of fancy to which the learned DAMON gives way in the exordium, reminding one forcibly of JEFFERIES, and SCROGGS, and NORBURY, whose most solemn adjudications were enlivened and lighted up by painfully mirth-provoking witticisms. Nor do we refer to the evident one-sidedness of the document; its wandering beyond the record to demonstrate the "learning" and "uprightness" of Judge KANE; and its contemptuous allusion to WILLIAMSON as a would-be martyr, who, with the key of his cell in his pocket, prefers to remain incarcerated, rather than issue forth with less than a triumph over all judicial authority: this, too, when the Court itself, by this extraordinary decision, actually threw away the key, which KANE had turned, but left in the door. What we would indicate as of especial importance are one or two points, extending in interest beyond the present time, and the persons involved directly in the present case, to all times and persons hereafter.

1. By this decision the Judiciary of Pennsylvania has made the largest concession to Federal usurpation that has marked the constitutional history of the Union. It has conceded the right to protect its own citizens against Federal oppression; and in cases where they are subjected to fine and imprisonment, though in flagrant disregard of right and law, and at the will of irresponsible and unauthorized subordinates of the National Government, the Courts of the State have stripped themselves of all power to intervene or relieve. This view of the the matter is justified by the fact that the Supreme Court has, in this WILLIAMSON case, denied itself the right to inquire into the justice of a commitment made out by a Federal Judge.

2. It has denuded the writ of habeas corpus of all value as a guarantee of personal rights. That writ, history and law both testify, was devised to protect the individual against judicial tyranny,—was demandable of right in all cases,—and the claim to it could only be suspended in two momentous exceptional events. Yet without any allegation of treason or invasion in the present instance, the writ is denied; and, of course, can be denied in any other case that may happen to occur. The Courts are declared to have unbounded discretion to construe any act or omission into contempt; and, under such construction, to have power to imprison for life,—an imprisonment more dreadful and dreary than that allotted to the most atrocious felon,—for pardon is possible for him, while the victim of Judicial dignity has no such hope to cheer and shorten his expiation.

3. Not only is the writ of habeas corpus invalidated by this decision, but all the other securities, so anxiously provided by the Constitution to protect the person, are destroyed. The provisions for the non-exaction of excessive bail—the non-infliction of cruel or unusual punishments—the right of trial by jury in all cases—are all worthless alike. And they were, equally with the writ, so many intended safeguards against precisely such acts of high-handed injustice as this of Judge KANE—so many tributes to the sacredness, the inviolability of personal freedom. Is it not a startling symptom of national dissolution that the Constitution, in the hands of the Judiciary, is always impotent when called upon to secure the blessings of Liberty—always omnipotent in behalf of Slavery!

4. WILLIAMSON is the victim of gratuitous presumptions. He was called upon to produce persons alleged to be in his custody. He made oath that they were not in his custody—that he was unaware of their whereabouts, and could not produce them. This oath, notwithstanding no charge of perjury can be legally sustained without the direct testimony of two witnesses to the falsity of the swearing, or written testimony equivalent in force, Judge KANE wantonly assumed to be perjury, and then, instead of proceeding in the usual course, construed the perjury into contempt, and caged his victim. The usual course would have been a direction to have the prisoner indicted for false swearing; but no such indictment could be procured, because the crime was less easy to prove than to presume. The magistrate dared not trust his charge to the investigation of a Grand Jury. As he proposed to override the substance of law, he found it convenient to disregard the forms. And these wanton assumptions Judge BLACK and his four associates adopt as wantonly. They say WILLIAMSON only has to purge himself of contempt to free himself. That purgation consists in producing before the District Court persons over whom he has no more control than he has over the Editor of the TIMES; whose attendance no legal process can assist him to procure; and who certainly will not go voluntarily, with the certainty awaiting them of a return to Slavery, a fate of which KANE and a retinue of legal bloodhounds are thirsting to be the ministers. It is not, therefore, true that WILLIAMSON is the master of his destiny; he is perfectly helpless. He is retained as a hostage for those who must purchase his liberty by paying their own. Those who expect to find a colored Damon in a fugitive slave, have loftier conceptions of negro magnanimity than we have dreamed of. They are the true "negro-worshippers."

And these are but a few of the practical and formidable inferences deducible from this astonishing paper. They are at once products and evidences of the growth of Slavery as a political power, adding to the monuments of its advance, existing in the Constitution, the Fugitive Law of 1793, that of 1850, and the late Territorial bills. The first of these left the Federal Government without power to extend or resist Slavery; and simply forbade individual resistance when a "person held to service or labor" in one State should escape into another. The second declared the condition was a great evil, not merely a negative duty; and that State authorities were bound, upon convincing proof of the claim, to make the surrender. The act of 1850 abandoned the interpretation of the Constitution, as given by that of 1793; and enlisted the Federal Government in the chase and capture of slaves, and that at the national expense. The recent legal dicta at Philadelphia go still further, by proposing to seize and hold free white men as hostages for runaway negroes, by nullifying all the constitutional provisions in favor of freedom, and removing all constitutional and legal obstacles to the absolute sway of Slavery.

Spread of the Yellow Fever.

The heat of the weather and the continued ravages of the yellow fever in Norfolk have had the effect of inducing our Board of Health to consider the best means of preventing its importation into our City. But, what the result of the considerations of the Board are, we have not been able to learn. The possibility of the disease manifesting itself here this season, and the probability of its extending its ravages further North next Summer, should be enough to induce our authorities to adopt instant sanitary measures to prevent the unspeakable misery which the yellow fever would cause. Doctor DAVID M. REESE expresses the opinion that the yellow fever cannot prevail here, as an epidemic, except in the case of a long continued heated term. But we are liable to long continued heated terms in Summer, and the yellow fever has prevailed here in past years to a most fearful extent. And it may again, unless proper measures be adopted to prevent it. Doctor REESE thinks that our system of sewerage and the Croton water are sufficient to preserve us from the infection, with a moderate degree of prudence. But, across the river in Brooklyn, there are neither sewers nor Croton water, and there is a larger population, and the condition of the streets is much worse than was the case in this City when it was last visited by the pestilence. Too much confidence must not be placed in our sewers and Croton. They are most important elements of public health, but there are sources enough of disease remaining which more than counterbalance the wholesome influences of our sewers and the Croton.

The Camden and Amboy Agitation.

The indignation of the country seems to be pretty thoroughly roused against the Camden and Amboy Railroad Company and the State of New-Jersey, and various schemes have been proposed for making them fear the effects of the righteous judgment which the popular voice has pronounced upon their mercenary disregard of the lives and comfort of passengers who are compelled to travel on their road. But it is only by legal proceedings that the stockholders and directors of the Company can be made to do their duty. At present the Camden and Amboy people enjoy a monopoly of the travel across the State of New-Jersey, and they will not voluntarily yield up any of their enormous profits, nor relinquish any of their privileges, in obedience to popular clamor. A correspondent requests us to publish a call for a monster meeting in the Park "of all those who have suffered from the enormous extortions for years by the Camden and Amboy Road, and those sympathizing with the sufferers in the late massacre," &c. A meeting composed of such materials would be monstrous in size, but it would have no effect in New-Jersey. The Camden and Amboy men have given no pledges to fortune for their good behavior, but content themselves, like some of the petty tyrants of the East, with levying tribute upon all unfortunate travelers who are compelled by stress of circumstances to cross their territory.

The Future Home of President Pierce.

It is stated by some of our cotemporaries, though we do not know with what degree of truth, that President PIERCE has recently bought a farm of 600 acres near Colesville, Montgomery County, Md., a few miles from Washington, as his future home. But whether true or not, as to the fact, it is not at all improbable, and even such a report shows how entirely General PIERCE must be alienated from his home, and his home from him; for such a rumor could not gain circulation unless it bore an air of truth. All our other Presidents have retired from the exalted office which they filled, to spend the remainder of their lives in the dignified quiet of private life, surrounded by their early friends, amid the scenes with which their youth had been familiar. It is a bad sign for President PIERCE, if it be true, that he is looking about for a home among strangers, instead of returning to his own State to spend the remainder of his days, after his presidential term expires. When WASHINGTON's term expired, he retired to his old farm on the Potomac, the ADAMSES went back to Quincy, JEFFERSON to Monticello, MADISON and MONROE to Virginia, JACKSON to the Hermitage and Tennessee, VAN BUREN to his native county on the banks of the Hudson, where he had not lived since he was a boy; TYLER returned to his native place, POLK to Tennessee, and FILLMORE to Buffalo. But President PIERCE turned his back on his native North when he went to WASHINGTON, and his native State repudiated her recreant son. Nothing seems more probable than that he should have made arrangements for spending the remainder of his days in a slave State, where the popular sentiment will not be a daily reproach to him for his conduct.

Nicaragua.

Col. KINNEY has addressed a letter to Don JOSE MARIA ESTRADA, Deputy President of the Republic of Nicaragua, in answer to a hostile decree issued on the 1st of June from the War Department of that Government, in which he expresses himself at a loss to account for the position taken against him—knowing that the objects of his expedition are entirely consistent with the welfare of the Republic—except upon the supposition that the Government has been influenced by rumors from interested sources. He assures the President that the objects of the expedition are proper in every respect, and that its interests and those of Nicaragua are identical. He concludes by requesting a conference, as follows:

"In order, therefore, to avoid unnecessary collision, and to arrive at an understanding mutually advantageous to the parties concerned, I hereby respectfully solicit an interview of conference between some authorized agent of the Nicaraguan Government, and a similarly empowered representative of my expedition."

To this request the President accedes, in a letter explanatory of the position of the Government, and assuring Col. KINNEY of its readiness to extend a welcome to all who come into the country with proper motives.

Mlle. Parodi's Fourth Concert.

Such a dense crowd as that assembled last night in Niblo's Saloon we do not wish to encounter again when the thermometer is at 90°. An audience literally packed, with no standing room for the critics, may be a glad sight for the manager—and it is no doubt—but it is sadly trying to those whose pleasures do not end with the last piece of the programme. Still, we must say, we are heartily rejoiced to see the deserved popularity these admirable entertainments have acquired. It argues well for the taste of New-York.

The programme was selected with the usual care displayed by Mr. STRAKOSCH, and contained many pieces performed at the previous concerts, repeated, of course, in consequence of their excellence. Mlle. PARODI was in excellent voice, and fairly captivated the audience with her admirable style and method. Mlle. STRAKOSCH, who has recently recovered from an attack of indisposition, sang with much mellowness and taste, and all the other artistes contributed in no ordinary degree to the enjoyment of the occasion.

We learn, and, we confess, with some surprise, that these excellent concerts will terminate on Saturday next, when the fifth and final one will come off. Their unequivocal success would seem to justify a longer series. On Friday, Mlle. PARODI will give her grand concert in Brooklyn. Our readers in that city should not neglect the opportunity.

Mlle. Vestvali's Concert.

We have reminded our readers that Mlle. VESTVALI, the beautiful contralto of the Academy of Music, has determined on abandoning her New-York admirers for more swarthy conquests in the City of Mexico. To-night she give a farewell Concert at Niblo's Saloon. Several artists of renown will assist, among others a new tenor, Señor CRESSIO, Mr. WILLIAM MASON, the eminent American Pianist, Mr. SCHREINER, the famous cornet player, and a host of others. There will, we trust, be a good and genial audience.

Rachel.

METROPOLITAN THEATRE.—Mlle. RACHEL appears to-night in her great character of Adrienne Lecouvreur, in the play of that name. We need say no more.

Theatrical.

WALLACK'S THEATRE.—This handsome place of amusement opens to-night with a powerful company and a new play, called the "Game of Love," from the pen of Mr. JOHN BROUGHAM. This and the afterpiece introduce many new members of the profession to a New-York audience.

BURTON'S THEATRE.—TOM TAYLOR'S last production—"Still Water Runs Deep"—is to be produced here to-night for the second time in America—BARNUM having got the start of Mr. BURTON on this occasion.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

By Telegraph to the New-York Daily Times.

Meeting of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions.

UTICA, Tuesday, Sept. 11.

The Board of American Commissioners for Foreign Missions assembled here to-day, with President THEODORE FRELINGHUYSEN in the Chair. The attendance was large. In the afternoon, the Treasurer and Prudential Committee presented their reports. The opening sermon was delivered this evening, by Rev. Dr. ADAMS, of Boston.

The Reported Election of Senator Atchison.

ST. LOUIS, Tuesday, Sept. 11.

At Jefferson, in this State, there is a society, composed of young students, who, with a view to perfect themselves in parliamentary usages, have organized a sham Legislature, the proceedings of which are conducted in the style and with quite as much gravity as many real ones. The Examiner prints the proceedings of this Legislature, and it was this mock affair that elected ATCHISON, and hoaxed one of the New-York journals.

Pennsylvania Whig State Convention.

HARRISBURG, Tuesday, Sept. 11.

The Whig State Convention assembled this morning. JOHN HENDERSON was elected President. Thirty-three delegates were present. The Convention has adjourned to this afternoon.

Upon reassembling the Convention nominated JOSEPH HENDERSON, of Washington County, for Canal Commissioner. On the first ballot HENDERSON received 20 votes, PASSMORE WILLIAMSON 8, R. M. LEMON 4. The whole proceedings were very lame. The resolutions adopted are strongly Anti-Slavery. The whole affair was a complete abortion.

Democratic Judicial Nomination.

ALBANY, Tuesday, Sept. 11.

AMASA J. PARKER has been unanimously nominated Judge of the Supreme Court by the Democratic Convention of the Third Judicial District.

Serious Railroad Accident.

HARRISBURG, Tuesday, Sept. 11.

The mail train which left here yesterday afternoon for the West, was thrown off the track in consequence of running over a cow, near Cumberland. WM. AHLE, one of the firemen, was instantly killed. JOHN G. MILLER, mail agent; JOHN SHUBY, engineer; QUINTIN RATCLIFFE, conductor, and Mr. FALLS, agent of Adams' Express, were seriously injured. The wounded were taken to New-Cumberland. None of the passengers were injured.

Fatal Accident on the Mad River Railroad.

SANDUSKY, Monday, Sept. 10.

The morning express train from Cincinnati, on the Mad River Railroad, was thrown off the track three miles from Kenton, owing to a plank at a crossing being placed too near the rail. The fireman was instantly killed, and the engineer, GEO. BRISTOL, and the conductor, WETHERELL, were seriously injured, but all the passengers escaped.

The Southern Mail—Election in Texas, &c.

BALTIMORE, Tuesday, Sept. 11.

By the arrival of the Southern Mail as late as due, we have New-Orleans papers of Wednesday last. The advices from Texas confirm the success of EVANS, the American nominee for Congress in the Eastern District. The election of the American candidates for Lieut. Governor and Land Commissioner is also claimed.

A gas explosion at Savannah, on Friday last, seriously injured four persons.

Rhode Island Cattle Exhibition.

PROVIDENCE, Tuesday, Sept. 11.

The Cattle Show commenced here to-day. The number of cattle entered is rather small, the efforts of the Society having been more especially directed to the horse exhibition, which opens to-morrow. The city is rapidly filling up with strangers.

Cricket Match.

ALBANY, Tuesday, Sept. 11.

The Cricket Match between the Harlem and Albany Clubs terminated this afternoon in the success of the Albany Club, by the large majority of 78. The score was as follows: Albany Club's first innings, 68; second innings, 199—Total, 267. Harlem Club's first innings, 96; second innings, 201—Total, 297.

The city thronged with people who have come to attend the Agricultural Fair of Formosa.

THURSDAY, Trade Sales have commenced to-day, with numerous buyers in very large, and the sales are brisk.

Destructive Fire at Chicago.

CHICAGO, Monday, Sept. 10.

The agricultural works of H. A. PITTS, in this city, were destroyed by fire yesterday morning. The loss is about $30,000, which is covered by insurance. Twenty-five of the patent grain separators, which lately proved victorious at the Paris Exhibition, were burned.

SAVANNAH, Tuesday, Sept. 11.

SPIRITUALISM ON A PIC-NIC.

Spirit Speeches—Spirit Dances—Spirit Sandwiches and Good Strong Tea.

Spiritualism went to Flushing yesterday, and enjoyed what they call, in Camp meeting, a refreshing season. It went in three steamboats, or rather it was conveyed in three separate parcels, by one. The first parcel, or that portion of Spiritualism that gets out of bed first in the morning, was taken on board the Island City at 8 A. M., and by the aid of a train of cars, deposited within one mile of a certain spirit-haunted woods, in the western part of the good old town of Flushing, on Long Island. The second parcel, with numerous baskets of food, succeeded in getting on board the ten o'clock boat. The third got its clothes on and appeared in full feather just in time for the 2½ P. M. trip. The whole comprised some three hundred persons. There was no extraordinary occurrence on the way to the wood, except that a horse ran away from near Winfield, at sight of the second installment of the company. This was the first undeniable evidence of the presence of spirits. Ever since Tam O'Shanter's gray mare Meg lost her tail by the hand of a witch, all horses have had an excusable horror of the disembodied. They always run fast when they come near, and it was noticed that the horse yesterday kept his tail well down.

For some time after arriving on the ground, appearances were similar to those of ordinary pic-nic parties, but at about 12 o'clock a circle was formed and sundry severe twitchings of the arms and legs of several members informed us that there was a terrible struggle going on between the affected persons and stray spirits that were endeavoring to obtain control over them. A very powerful spirit wrestled with a young man, who resisted bravely, but after a rough and tumble of five minutes the spirit gave him a sudden trip and twitch, and down he went. He was vanquished. Considerable money changed hands outside the circle, when the result was announced. Another spirit took a fancy to the left leg of a lad, who appeared to be about 18 years of age. He danced on his remaining leg to the amusement of the undeveloped. But, while he was engaged at his single-toe jig, there came a second spirit, more vicious than the first, and pulled vigorously at the right side of his mouth, causing him to show his teeth, in a very disagreeable manner. He held out steadily against both of them, and finally they gave up the fight. The lad straightened his leg, adjusted his mouth, and triumphed. A very feeble attack was now made upon two females, but the hour for dining having arrived, the spirits retired in a most gentlemanly style, and the party dined. Our reporter had secured an introduction to the prettiest lady present; consequently we find nothing in his notes under head of dinner, except—good strong tea—taper fingers—two large cups—pretty song—three sandwiches—fine voice—encore.

After dinner, Mr. SMITH, the gentleman who, when in the razor-strop line, always had one more left of the same sort, got upon a stump and announced in his peculiar way, that he had something of great importance to impart to all present. Having said this much he awaited the effect, and then proposed a collection for the benefit of the colored man who had brought water for making the tea, and furnished planks for seats. Mr. SMITH went into the merits of the colored man extensively, repeating them every time he received a sixpence with unabating industry.

Mr. SMITH was followed by Prof. BRITTAN, who in a very pleasing speech, introduced Prof. FOWLER, of Poughkeepsie, as a gentleman who would entertain the audience with a logical disquisition on the great subject in which millions are now interested.

Mr. FOWLER mounted a table, and after stating that if any one expected anything extraordinary from him, he would be disappointed, spoke with much eloquence on the wonderful power of the human mind. He did not attempt an explanation of the alleged discoveries of the spiritualists, but rather left it to be inferred that as they were yet beyond human comprehension, explanation was not yet to be expected. After we could account satisfactorily for dreams—tell how it is that when the mortal part is slumbering, the mind wanders toward and converses with old and far distant friends, and even forms new acquaintances—how it revels in strange pleasures, sees sights never seen before, and enjoys sensations that are new, we might think of arriving at some solution of the mysteries of spiritualism.

He was followed by Mr. BRITTAN, who spoke in the same strain, and was equally well received.

Mr. AMBLER was next introduced, and, professedly, under spiritual influence, recited a poem, the chief merits of which were sound and gesticulation. There were several others who addressed the audience, but the above were the most important.

A large circle was now formed, and all prepared for interesting manifestations. Nearly seventy persons joined the circle, and the developed mediums present were requested to take a position inside. Some eight or ten entered, among them Mr. SMITH, before mentioned as having become notorious in the razor-strop line. Mr. SMITH made a very sensible speech, in which he claimed that as those within the circle were honest, respectable persons, they would not behave in a ridiculous manner, if they could help it. He then behaved very strangely, to say the least. He crooked his shoulders, as if he thought he had a bag of shavings on his back; screwed up his face to the sticking point and in a loud yet familiar voice, declared he had a letter which he wished some one to read for him, as he could not read a word himself. A very mild lady, with some witchness of eye, asked, as she swept the sky with her right hand, if the letter was in an unknown tongue.

Mr. SMITH, still maintaining the bag-of-shavings position, thought that was the most ridiculous question he ever heard. How the deuce could he tell whether it was in an unknown tongue or not, when he could not read any tongue. He held up both hands, as if the letters were there; several persons outside the circle proceeded to read the document, if he would hand it over, but instead of doing that he pitched into the entire party, on account of its ignorance, not excepting even the developed mediums. Spiritualism was literally up a stump. Here was an imaginary letter on to read, and no one equal to the task. Mr. SMITH, strange though it may seem, insisted exceedingly. Spiritualism was in a quandary. At length Mr. RANDOLPH came forward, and in a few minutes was sufficiently under the influence to read the troublesome document. Mr. RANDOLPH is, perhaps, the best developed medium in this country. The letter was from a person now in the spirit, but had a very bad name. He had done about all he could, while in the flesh, to injure Mr. SMITH, but he was willing to go to Mr. SMITH and ask to enjoy in his spirit-world. Mr. RANDOLPH was so much exhausted by his efforts that he was for a considerable time prostrate upon the floor. As soon as he left the circle, Mr. SMITH was good humored enough to say that previously been vanquished by a spirit, tried to break down a young tree, but, failing in that, he commenced twitching his shoulders and legs, and the reputation of his dancing master was in great peril. Several mediums now went about wildly, stamping short sentences and throwing their arms about precisely as if they were supercharged pump-handles. How long they would have continued there is no knowing, had not the spirit of Paddy Somebody appeared a down-town clerk, who was in a distance, and, in a rich Irish brogue, drawn off the spectators. Paddy gave a hop in the spirit as he went on the floor. He gave a very bad report of the whereabouts of the spirit of Sir Peter, Brotherhood of Spiritual Freedom through the medium by a dark haired lady, who fought in it, which he performed with a small glass and finally made light of. When Paddy's medium jumped off the table, the spirit of Paddy did not remove the affect, and the assembly moved to where a man without his coat was getting himself in a sweat over the withered arm of a lady; he tried to remove it as the other, but did not succeed. It was now time for the late home train, and spiritualism, defeated with the way in which it had spent the day, started its tea parties and its new dances, and proceeded homeward. Private circles will be continued as usual in New-York and Brooklyn.

HIGGINS & KELLOGG No. 25 John-st.

WILL BE PUBLISHED ON THE 15TH INST.,
The prettiest of all books,
The Fairy Tale of CINDERELLA,
forming the first book of Hewitt's Series of Illuminated Household Stories for Little Folks, in neat, small quarto, with two superb Illustrations, beautifully engraved by the best artists in the country, in a style superior to any thing of the kind ever published, either in Europe or America, and printed superbly, on very superior paper. Price, in illuminated cover and cloth, 50 cents; full bound and gilt edges, 50 cents. The novelty in this series is a colored frontispiece to each volume, in imitation of an oil painting—a new feature in book illustrations in this country. From numerous letters published by distinguished gentlemen to whom the enterprise has been submitted, he takes pleasure in presenting the following extracts, which will speak for themselves:
"Cinderella is really beautiful in its typography and illustrations, and I am surprised and gratified that the drawings are original, designed and engraved by artists in our own country. WASHINGTON IRVING."
"I have never seen so beautiful an edition of Cinderella; pray send me another volume which you may publish this year. ROBERT C. WINTHROP" [Boston].
Miss Louisa Pyne (prima donna in English opera) "assures the publishers of her appreciation of the admirable way in which the publication (Cinderella) has been gotten up, both as to typography and illustrations."
The illustrations of Cinderella are excellent, and the whole appearance of the little work is so tasteful, that a continuation of the series will be looked for with pleasure.

THE NEW SOUTHERN NOVEL.
THE HIDDEN PATH.
BY MARION HARLAND
Author of "Alone." One neat 12mo. Price, $1 25.
10,000 COPIES HAVE BEEN SOLD.
THE INDORSEMENT OF THE NORTHERN PRESS:
From the N. Y. Courier & Enquirer
It will every way enhance the praise so worthily won by the author's first effort. It exhibits the same healthful sentiment and beautiful feeling, the same truthful simplicity and yet charming elegance, the same just appreciation of different phases of social and domestic life. The tale is one of American life, and is most aptly and gracefully wrought.
From the Boston Daily Journal
"The Hidden Path" is a work of originality and genius, full of striking thoughts, beautiful descriptions, and graceful conversation; but intensely interesting enough as a story to carry the reader through a volume, from the perusal of which one rises better at heart and with a more genial, kindly feeling toward humanity in general.
From the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin.
We take the liberty of confidently commending it to our readers as one of those gentle, earnest books, which will be found acceptable to all pure hearts, and become, we sincerely trust, an especial favorite with the women readers of America. LOLD & TAYLOR'S.
Twelfth Thousand now ready, and for sale by all booksellers. J. C. DERBY, Publisher, New-York.

TO CAPITALISTS.—HOPEWELL COAL AND IRON COMPANY'S COAL LAND.—4,000 acres of the above valuable Semi Anthracite Coal and Iron Lands, known as the "Broad Top Mountain," in the Counties of Bedford and Huntingdon, Pa., and about 40 miles of which is underlaid by the various veins of Coal that are found in the mountain. For the character and quality of this Coal we refer to the Geological Report and the accompanying letters in our prospectus. The "Broad Top Coal Field" is regarded as one of the most valuable mineral regions in the State of Pennsylvania, for, independent of the advantage it possesses in the immense deposits of Iron Ore of various qualities which abound in this region, (as will be seen by the Report of the State Geologist, Henry D. Rogers made in 1836, as well as the Reports of other Geologists, made since,) furnaces are already erected there for making Iron, and it is confidently believed the Huntingdon and Broad Top Railroad being now completed, will make it one of the most extensive Iron and Coal regions in the State. Lime stone is to be found, of the very best quality, along the line of the road, and within three miles of the Coal and Ore. For terms and view of Charter, Maps, Reports, &c., apply to A. J. BLEECKER & CO., No. 7 Broad-st.

IOWA LANDS.—Capitalists and others wishing to make investments in Iowa Lands, can do so through the undersigned. They are several millions of acres of valuable lands subject to entry for less than $1 25 per acre, with Land warrants which will pay very largely for the coming five years. We have experienced and competent surveyors constantly employed in selecting lands, and we can make locations upon the choicest tracts, without delay.

Land Warrants loaned at Western rates of interest, viz. 40 per cent.

Orders solicited. All business pertaining to Western Lands attended to promptly.

Inquire of J. H. TURNIER, No. 14 Wooster-st., any morning during the week, from 8 to 10 A. M.

FOR SALE OR EXCHANGE FOR PRODUCTIVE CITY PROPERTY, IN NEW-YORK OR BROOKLYN.—A valuable farm and country seat, about 150 acres; 60 acres in a high state of cultivation—the remainder woodland; 39 miles from Brooklyn, near Babylon, L. I.; a very healthy location—having a fine view of the bay and ocean. On the farm is a new two-story frame dwelling, 40x32 feet, wing attached, 20x30 feet, all fitted in with brick; barns, carriage house, farmer's house and other out-buildings, in good condition. Horses, cattle, carriage, wagons, &c., will be sold with the farm, or separately. For further particulars inquire of R. BREWER, Babylon, L. I.

FARM FOR SALE.—The subscriber offers for sale the place upon which he now resides, situated in the Township of Hampton, Orange County, N. Y., four miles from the New-York and Erie Railroad Depot, at Goshen, consisting of ninety-two and a half acres of first rate land, well watered and fenced, and suitably divided. The house is new, large, built in the best style, with every convenience for dairy operations, containing eight sleeping rooms, two large parlors, dining room, basement kitchen, &c. The outbuildings comprise a large barn, hay and carriage house, and wood house, all in good condition and well stored. Fruit of every description in abundance. Full particulars may be obtained on application to M. Snowden, No. 175 Fulton-st.; Thomas Snowden, No. 155 Front-st.; M. H. Stafford, No. 192 Fulton-st., or the subscriber on the premises. Address Goshen Post office.
WILLIAM H. BEERS.

FARM FOR SALE.—An elegantly located piece of 65 acres of excellent land, situated 2½ miles from the depot at Madison, and 1 mile from Morristown, N. J. On the place is a first rate house with 10 rooms, barn, carriage-house, granary, ice-house, bathhouse, and every convenience for a genteel family. There is also on the place a fine peach orchard in full bearing, of 800 trees of the best varieties; also, 30 grape vines, with an abundance of apple and other fruit trees, comprising plum, apple, cherry, and other kinds. The above will be sold in whole or in part, and would be a first rate investment for a capitalist, as the Morris and Essex Railroad runs directly through the property, making the location very desirable for residence for gentlemen doing business in the City. Good City property taken in exchange. Application may be made to JOHN M. ENGLAND, on the premises.

A NEW THING ENTIRELY.—THE MOST ASTONISHING PERFORMANCE HEARD OF! BARRELS FIRKINS, KEGS, AND THE WHOLE COOPER FAMILY MADE AND FINISHED WITHOUT A DRIP OF AIR-TIGHT AND SMOOTH TO VARNISH, ENTIRELY BY MACHINERY.—Our Machine, with the tools used to perform the work, is a patent, for which we have received gold and silver medals, and State diplomas, and last, though not least, the first and only premium on keg and barrel machinery, by Jury D., at the Crystal Palace.

It takes the timber in the bolt, saws the staves, hollowing with the grain, gets them all of equal length, planes both inside and outside perfectly smooth, tries the quality of the timber, joints them in a perfect manner, giving each stave its proper proportion of bilge, according to its width, be it wide or narrow, howells, sets the cross, turns the head, and prepares the Barrel or Keg for the hooping process, in a manner so perfect, complete and well finished, that we challenge the world to produce a better Barrel, Firkin or Keg than our Machines make at the rate of three hundred per day, to the sing le-stave-to which we invite the particular attention of all who choose to give them an inspection.

We manufacture, with our Machine, articles of the Barrel family, from the small Firkin to the Lead Keg to the largest Cask in general use—all of which can be warranted equal to hold the most subtile liquids, or be adapted to the packing of dry goods. In fact, the machine cannot make an imperfect article, except the defect is exclusively in the timber.

We have a shop at Elmira, New-York, directly on the line of the New-York and Erie Railroad, and the Elmira and Niagara Falls Railroad, five minutes' walk north of the depot, where any persons who wish can witness the operation of these Machines, and test to their perfect satisfaction every branch of the work. We will find the greatest pleasure in exhibiting to such everything connected with the work.

Persons desirous of purchasing the right and machines for any location now secured, can obtain any information in relation thereto by applying to us through the mail. There are two new and very valuable improvements still, upon which we are now applying for patents, which we shall be prepared to sell to the highest bidder, leaving the citizens of New-York, in regard to one of the most important daily necessities, dependent on their energy.

The Common Council ought not to yield their assent to a measure at once subversive of the intent of the Constitution of the State, and of the public interest, committed to their charge. Such privileges cannot be safely conferred upon any body of men. They, therefore, submit for adoption the following resolution:

Resolved, That it is inexpedient to grant the prayer of the Metropolitan Gaslight Company, and that the same be denied.

MEDICAL.

THE MARRIED WOMAN'S PRIVATE MEDICAL COMPANION.

By Dr. A. M. MAURICEAU, Professor of Diseases of Women. One Hundredth Edition, (800,000,) 12mo., pp. 250. (On fine paper, extra binding $1.)

Every woman can here discover, by comparing her own symptoms with those described, the nature character and cause of her complaint and be spared much anxiety and suffering. The wife about becoming a mother has often need of instruction and advice in respect to her situation, which she will here find. This book tells her what is the matter, and tells her what to do for it, in simple but chaste words, and such as she can understand.

Those suffering from obstructions or irregularities peculiar to the female system, or from prolapsus uteri, (falling of the womb,) or from fluor albus, will each find in its pages the means of prevention, amelioration and relief.

Extract of a letter from a gentleman in Dayton, Ohio:

DAYTON, May 1, 1847.

Dr. A. M. MAURICEAU—My Dear Sir: My wife has been perceptibly sinking for some three years or more, in consequence of great shrinks and suffering some months before and during confinement; every succeeding one more and more debilitated and prostrated her, putting her life in imminent danger, and which was on the last occasion despaired of. I supposed that this state of things was inevitable, and resigned myself to meet the inevitable result. I happened to highly spoken of, as containing some matters reaching my case. On the receipt and perusal I cannot express to you the relief it afforded my distressed mind, and the joy its pages imparted to her with my own surprising that the great discovery of M. M. Dowmeny prevailed. It is a remedy, in respect to me which I little conceived was possible. But for the, one another year would have passed over my head, in all human probability my wife would have been in her grave, and my children left motherless.

For sale by STRINGER & TOWNSEND, No. 222 Broadway; SHERMAN & CO. Astor House, No. 1 Vesey-st.; DEWITT & DAVENPORT, Tribune Buildings, and at the Principal Office, No. 152 Liberty-st., New-York; JOSEPH TUCKER, Mobile; Jas. T. R. PETERS, No. 162 Chestnut-st., Philadelphia. On the receipt of $1, a copy will be transmitted by mail, free of postage, to any part of the United States. All letters must be addressed, postpaid, to Dr. A. M. MAURICEAU, Office, No. 152 Liberty-st., New-York, or to Box No. 1,224 New-York Post Office.

THE GREATEST MEDICAL DISCOVERY OF THE AGE.—Mr. KENNEDY, of Roxbury, has discovered in one of our common pasture weeds, a remedy that cures every kind of humor, from the worst Scrofula down to a common Pimple.

He has tried it in over 1,100 cases, and never failed, except in two cases, both thunder humor. He has now in his possession over 200 certificates of its virtue, all within 20 miles of Boston.

Two bottles are warranted to cure a nursing sore mouth.

One to three bottles will cure the worst kind of pimples on the face.

Two to three bottles will clear the system of boils.

Two bottles are warranted to cure the worst canker in the mouth or stomach.

Three to five bottles are warranted to cure the worst case of erysipelas.

One to two bottles are warranted to cure all humor in the eyes.

Two bottles are warranted to cure running of the eyes and blotches among the hair.

Four to six bottles are warranted to cure corrupt and running ulcers.

One bottle will cure scaly eruption of the skin.

Two to three bottles are warranted to cure the worst case of ringworm.

Two to three bottles are warranted to cure the most desperate case of tetter.

Three to four bottles are warranted to cure the salt rheum.

Five to eight bottles will cure the worst case of scrofula.

Reader, I peddled over a thousand bottles of this in the vicinity of Boston. I know the effects of it in every case. So sure as water will extinguish fire, so sure will this cure humor. I never sold a bottle of it but that sold another; after a trial, it always speaks for itself. There are two things about this herb that appear to me surprising—first, that it grows in our pastures, in some places quite plentiful, and yet its value has never been known until I discovered it in 1845; second, that it should cure all kinds of humor.

In order to give some idea of the sudden rise and great popularity of the discovery, I will state that in April, 1853, I peddled it, and sold about six bottles per day. In April, 1854, I sold over a thousand bottles per day.

No change of diet ever necessary—eat the best you can get, and enjoy life.

DIRECTIONS FOR USE.—Adults, one table spoonful per day; children over 8 years, dessert spoonful; children from 3 to 8 years, tea spoonful. As no direction can be applicable to all constitutions, take sufficient to operate on the bowels twice a day.

TRESSEMAR—THE GREAT EUROPEAN DISCOVERY—Protected by Royal Letters Patent of England, and secured by the seals of the Ecole de Pharmacie de Paris and the Imperial College of Medicine, Vienna.

TRESSEMAR No. 1—Is the remedy for general and local debility, loss of virile power, premature decay, and all the distressing consequences arising from early abuse. Its effects are astonishing in youth, manhood and old age; the virile powers would not become impaired, even in the decline of life, if the Tressemar were universally adopted; all physical impediments vanish like magic before its influence, thus rendering its use invaluable to those entering the married state.

TRESSEMAR No. 2—Completely and entirely eradicates all traces of those disorders which copaiva and cubebs have so long been thought an antidote for, to the ruin of the health of a vast portion of the population.

TRESSEMAR No. 3—Is the great European remedy for that class of disorders which unfortunately the English Physician treats with mercury, to the inevitable destruction of the patient's constitution, and which all the Sarsaparilla in the world cannot cure.

TRESSEMAR No. 1, 2 and 3, are alike devoid of taste or smell, and all nauseating qualities. They may lay on the toilet table without their use being detected.

Sold in its course at $2 each, divided into separate doses, as administered by Velpeau, Lisfranc, Ricord, &c.

To be had wholesale and retail of Mr. H. A. BARROW, No. 31 Greene-st., near Canal, New-York, specially appointed by the Proprietor and Patentee an Agent for the United States, and every other part of America. Immediately on receiving a remittance Mr. Barrow will forward the Tressemar to any part of the world, securely packed, and addressed according to the instructions of the writer.

Retail Agents required. Terms cash.

THE KNOW-NOTHINGS.

THEIR PROSPECTS, &c.

Central Republican Committee.

The Central Republican Committee of the City and County of New-York, met at the Mercer House last evening. Hon. CHARLES C. LEIGH in the Chair; LEWIS H. WATTS, Secretary. After reading the minutes the Committee on Credentials reported that twenty Wards, out of the twenty-two comprising the City, had duly appointed Delegates, most of whom were in attendance. In the matter of the delegation from Eleventh Ward where seats are contested, the Committee reported that for the purpose of promoting Union and harmony in the Ward, the Committee had recommended, and both delegations had agreed, to disband the existing two organizations, and form a new one in the Ward, which is to elect a new set of delegates.

The report was accepted, and a motion made to recognize the delegation headed by LOUIS H. WATTS, as the only one entitled to seats in the Committee.

After considerable discussion, the whole subject was indefinitely postponed.

On motion the Committee went into an election for permanent officers, with the following result:

Chairman—EDWARD A. STANSBURY, of the Fifteenth Ward.

Vice-Chairman—CHARLES C. LEIGH, of the Ninth Ward; R. T. HALLOCK, of the Tenth Ward.

Secretaries—CHARLES COACHMAN, of the Twenty-first Ward; LEWIS H. WATTS, of the Eleventh Ward.

Gen. CHAMBERS, from the Committee on Resolutions appointed at the previous meeting, presented the following:

RESOLUTIONS.

Resolved, That we regard Slavery as everywhere an institution hostile to the rights of man; a violation of the principles that justified our Declaration of National Independence and the immense expenditure of treasure and of blood by which that Declaration was sustained; a "disturbing element in politics; the source of political fears, jealousies, and animosities; the bane of free labor, inasmuch as it degrades the laborer and diminishes the wages of wages by compelling millions to toil without compensation; and total y irreconcilable with morality, and is also irreconcilable with our professions of democracy, and with the whole spirit and tendency of our institutions, and has compelled us to resist its aggressions to the very verge of our constitutional power.

Resolved, That the repeal of the Missouri Compromise, and the subsequent history of the transaction, have been only an act of Free-soil, to the inroads of Slavery, in a manner as the popular will and in contempt of justice, decency and common honesty, deserves the execration of all honest men; and a measure done basely, and its authors and abettors have covered with that severest reprobation of an insulted and prostrated people.

Resolved, That in the invasion of Kansas by armed ruffians from Missouri, who took forcible possession of the ballot-boxes, and by force and violence, in defiance of the sovereignty and the rights of actual settlers, elected their own tools to serve as a Legislative assembly for Kansas; in the despotic and bloody enactments of this sham Legislature, and in the illegal violence to which the friends of Freedom in Kansas have been exposed, we have a repetition of the course followed by the Slave Power which keeps no faith, regards no compacts, respects no rights, but through the humiliation and subjugation of the North aims to enthrone Slavery, and render it compulsory in the Legislative council.

Resolved, That further concession to such a spirit is not only folly but a crime; that we will, therefore, oppose, to its insolent demands, the calm courage of freemen, and by every means which freemen may legitimately use, war against its usurpations.

Resolved, That we demand the restoration of the Missouri Compromise, or, in default of that, the admission of no more Slave States to the Union.

Resolved, That inasmuch as Freedom is the great national element, while Slavery is narrowly sectional, the Republican party is National, both in principle and in purpose; while those organizations that adhere to the Slave Power, in proportion as they are in demands, are sectional parties, and, as such, both American and anti-Republican.

Resolved, That character, not the accident of birth, the possession and culture, not social caste, should constitute the test of fitness for the elective franchise, and that we are therefore opposed to all secret political societies that invade Government and proscribe men because of birthplace or religious faith, for such proscription is alike unchristian and unrepublican.

Resolved, That to guard against the abuse to which the system of primary meetings has been subject, and to secure a fair expression of opinion, and preference from all under cover of the party, the Ward Republican organizations are hereby requested and required to provide a box which shall contain a declaration of Republican principles, for the signature of electors, and that only such as signify their affiliation with the party by signing such declaration, shall be entitled to vote in its primary meetings.

All but the last resolution, which was laid on the table temporarily, were unanimously adopted, and followed by three cheers.

After the transaction of some further business, of no general importance, the Committee adjourned to meet this night week.

We have rarely seen a more dignified body of men, and unless has a body of persons of more influence in their respective localities been convened together in the City on any political Committee.

Republican Committee Twentieth Ward—A Four-Fruit Platform.

The Republicans of the Twentieth Ward held a meeting last night at Continental Hall, corner of Thirty-fourth-street and Eighth-avenue, for the purpose of perfecting their organization, and taking measures to carry through their nominees at the forthcoming election.

J. WHELPLEIGH occupied the Chair, and T. ALLAIRE discharged the duties of Secretary. A Committee of three, consisting of J. S. FOUNTAIN, S. O. BENNETT and the Chairman, was appointed to confer with the Central Committee, respecting the best mode of organizing the Wards and County.

Mr. BENNETT stated that the doctrine of the Association was—first, in opposition to the extension of Slavery; second, a judicious distribution of the public lands to actual settlers; third, the support of constitutional laws for prohibiting the sale of intoxicating beverages; and fourth, the free education of the whole people. These were the four cardinal points of the platform on which they were determined to stand.

Thirteenth Ward Republican Association.

Pursuant to the call of the regular appointed Delegates of the Republican County Convention, a meeting was held at No. 4 Lewis-street, on the 11th inst. On motion JOHN BURR, Esq., was called to the Chair, and HENRY A. SMITH, Esq., elected Secretary.

The following persons were elected Delegates to the Republican State Convention, to be held at Syracuse on the 26th inst.: MARCUS P. FERRIS, and HENRY C. BOYD, and ex Aldermen, ALPHEUS CARPENTER, and Dr. T. WASHBURN.

Opposition to the extension of Slavery, and to any interference with the institution where it exists, was declared the sentiment of the organization.

Workingmen's Provincial Committee.

This Committee met last evening at the Cooper House, W. ARBUTHNOT, presiding, and W. WEST and D. C. HENDERSON, acting as Secretaries.

The following standing Committees were announced:

Correspondence—George W. Jaques, W. West, D. C. Henderson, John G. Woodruff, G. C. Hibbard, Jr.

Financial—A. J. Williamson, W. Arbuthnot, W. West, D. C. Henderson, John A. Smith, R. W. Morgan and G. W. Jaques.

Printing—A. J. Williamson, W. West, George W. Jaques, W. Arbuthnot and Martin H. Driscoll.

WILLIAM WEST, of the Third Assembly District, and GEORGE W. JAQUES, of the Tenth Assembly District, were recommended respectively to the support of the Workingmen of the District where they reside for Assembly. Adjourned to Friday evening.

The Utterly Ignorant Party.

Some our Tenth Ward K. N. Reporter was so cruelly overhauled by F—— B——, Bro. B—— and the Faithful, and another reporter of ours was so shabby maltreated by drunken rowdies at Tammany Hall, we have taken less pleasure in visiting the haunts of the "Indeed." Filled with reportings they who so dreaded to be reported, now undertake the job for us on their own account. Of course we cannot vouch for their accuracy as when our own men brought the news. Still easier task we would trust any of them that have volunteered their services.

The following nominations have not all been published heretofore:

KNOW-NOTHING NOMINATIONS.

Aldermen.

Thirteenth Ward—JAMES GRIFFITHS.

Eleventh Ward—S. M. HEGGEN.

Twentieth Ward—CUMMINGS M. TUCKER.

Councilmen.

Fifth and Eighth Districts—DANIEL R. McCORMICK.

Fifth Ward District—Capt. JAMES S. HOLMES.

Fifty-third District—JOSEPH B. PERLOCK.

The Know-Nothings of the Twentieth Assembly District, comprising the Sixteenth and Twentieth Wards, have been unable to agree on a candidate. The delegates from each Convention met, and after forty-eight ballots, adjourned sine die. The Sixteenth Ward presented the name of PETER FULLMER. The Twentieth Ward insisted on JEREMIAH S. PELLOCK. As the matter now stands there are two candidates in the field.

Two good-looking gent'emen, who left their lanterns out of sight, if they had them, came in after dark last night and averred that—"In the TIMES of Sept. 4, in an article entitled 'K. N. Council of the Seventh Ward,' there were many errors, chief of which is the statement that Mr. JAMES W. BARKER was present and made a speech which was 'coldly received,' &c. Mr. BARKER was five hundred miles from the City on the occasion alluded to, and has just returned."

It regrets us to think that an error should go so long uncorrected—but better late than never—and we are obliged to our tardy correctors of the press.

"Coldly received"—that was all wrong too, we pre'sume. If Mr. B. was present—and they say he was not—no doubt they took all he offered "warm, with sugar."

Very Busy.

The politicians just now are very busy. One told us yesterday that he had been so occupied that he scarcely recognized his own daughter, who had been to hear RACHEL and to study French during the past week, and was almost grown out of recollection. He carried a daguerreotype of his wife in his pocket perpetually—bound not to forget her. He found a couple of twins—all his own—in his house last night, on going home, that he did not know of; his next oldest had cut three double teeth; Bobby had had the measles and Bill learned to smoke since he took his last observation. He is a nominee for the Board of Councilmen.

Arrest of the "Blue Man" Again.

The troubles of the "Blue Man" are unceasing. He was arrested again last evening. This time by Officer MYERS of the Second Ward, charged with committing a nuisance in Theatre-alley. He was conveyed to the Second Ward Station House, but was released from custody by Captain LEONARD, after a short detention.

Theatre-alley has been made so intolerable a nuisance that the storekeepers on Park-row petitioned the Mayor to put a stop to the grievance. Orders were given accordingly to the Captain of the Second Ward to arrest any person who, on being warned, persisted in committing a nuisance in the alley. The arrest of the "Blue Man" was made in accordance with this order. While being conveyed to the Station-house, some of his friends (he has a great many friends) expressed their sympathy for him, and threats were made to rescue him from the hands of the officer. Some persons who witnessed the arrest, allege that the "Irishman" who had him in charge, used the unfortunate "Blue Man" with uncalled for severity. The "Irishman" is a native American—we believe.

Serious Accident.

Quite a serious accident occurred Monday afternoon to Mr. JAMES BOGARDUS, a useful citizen, and well known from his connection with the manufacture and erection of iron fronts to buildings. He was, at the time of the accident, engaged in superintending the hoisting of cast iron pillars on a new iron structure in Centre-street. The building is a shot tower, intended to be 200 feet high, built of pillars 15 feet in length, standing upon each other, and held together by iron bands which surround the structure at the top of each set of pillars. Having reached the height of sixty feet, the building was firmly braced, a temporary flooring was laid upon its top, the derrick elevated upon it and a pillar of the next story was being raised. At this moment the derrick slipped or was thrown down, and it carried old Mr. BOGARDUS with it. Fortunately he fell only about twelve feet upon the flat roof of a building. Both his arms were broken at the wrists, and the front portion of his forehead immediately over the left eye was badly contused. He was carried to the New-York Hospital. No internal injuries were received. The building, in which Mr. BOGARDUS took much pride, was being erected for JAMES MCCULLOCH, and will be completed—no accident happening—in about ten days. It is expected to support a weight of six thousand pounds at the top. Mr. B. was much better yesterday, and his physician thinks he will be able to be about again in ten days; although it will of course be sometime before the broken bones are firmly united. Mr. B. is about 63 years of age.

The Live Stock Market To-day.

If reports from the West be correct, the butchers will find an unusual supply of animals for sale to-day. A Buffalo paper of Monday says that on the preceding day, eleven trains, numbering 186 cars, were sent East over the New-York Central Railroad. These were loaded with cattle, sheep and hogs. If they were all filled with cattle, 15 to 16 in a car, which is the usual number, there would be nearly three thousand beeves. Last week there were in this market twice as many beeves via the Erie Railroad as by the New-York Central. It should be stated, however, that many of the animals over the Central Railroad go to Albany, Boston and other Eastern and Northern cities. But with due allowance for these, we shall look for lively times at Forty-fourth-street day, and present full reports of the results to-morrow morning.

A Distinguished Methodist Among Us.

Among the passengers by the Atlantic was Rev. WM. ARTHUR, of the Wesleyan Methodist Church in Great Britain. We learn that he, with Rev. R. SCOTT, are sent to this Continent for the purpose of raising money to aid the Wesleyan body in Ireland. Mr. ARTHUR is widely known as the author of The Successful Merchant. He is also well known as one of the most popular lecturers of the day. A committee was appointed, not long since, by the Methodists of this country, to invite Mr. ARTHUR to visit the United States. He will probably commence his public labors immediately.

American Institute Fair at the Palace.

The American Institute is making active preparations for its Fair at the Crystal Palace. Exhibitors should secure places as speedily as possible. The applications, thus far, exceed the anticipations of the Managers. The Railroad and Steamboat Companies will convey articles for exhibition free of charge.

Loss of the Yacht Wm. McGrath.

Last Sunday, as a party were sailing up the East River, they got on the Hog's Back in Hell Gate, and had a very narrow escape of their lives. Very fortunately small boats came to their assistance, and landed them on Ward's Island, where the yacht sank. She is a total loss. The Wm. McGrath was a yacht of about 9 tons, and owned by Mr. McGrath.

Extension of Chambers-Street.

The Committee on Streets, of the Board of Councilmen, met yesterday at 3½ o'clock, in the Councilmen's Chamber, to hear the parties interested in the proposed extension of Chambers-street to James-slip. Present Councilmen JENKINS, (Chairman,) CUNNINGHAM, WILD, GRAY and TAYLOR. A large number of owners of property, affected by the proposed extension, were in attendance.

Change of Route.

It will be observed from an advertisement in our columns that the steamship Roanoke will hereafter receive freight for Richmond, her route now being to Petersburg and Richmond direct.

☞ The firm of BRANCH, BRIGGS & Co., takes in a new partner to-day. In will be known hereafter as BRANCH, BRIGGS, WOOD & Co. The Mayor, BRANCH says, was yesterday invited to join this pleasant little party, and will be on hand to-day to add his testimony. The subpœna was served yesterday afternoon, just as the Mayor was stepping out of his office to review the Buffaloians. Rich developments are promised this afternoon.

☞ The decision of Justice STUART upon the case of JAMES WALLACE, charged with having sold rye whisky, we give in full in another column. The decision carries the case to the General Sessions, and as that it establishes the routine that future cases are to take, it is important.

☞ The steamship Alabama, S. CHURCH, Commander, arrived yesterday morning in 60 hours from Savannah, with merchandise and passengers. On her passage she exchanged signals with the steamer Nashville, hence for Charleston, and Florida, hence for Savannah.

☞ The Aldermanic Committee on the offal contract was to have met yesterday; but the Buffalo soldiers were on hand, and the Committee meeting went over to Monday.

The Board of Health was in session yesterday afternoon. Closed doors, as usual, and not even a keyhole to peep through. It is understood that yellow fever was the topic.

☞ The Pharmaceutists are in convention in the City. They have hardly got under way yet.

☞ The Furey Investigation Committee did not meet yesterday.

☞ Still another invention for preservation of life at fires. Principle—that a net springs out from the wharf as the boat leaves, so that an individual—who is foolish enough to jump after the steamer and mistake his mark—falls into the net instead of the river. Mr. SUMNER, inventor, No. 117 Troy-street. A large haul Mr. S. will get if he sets his net at any East River ferry dock—for fools are plenty.

A Secret Body's Proceedings.

The Police Commissioners had a meeting yesterday afternoon when all three of the members were present. The business of the day was the examination of candidates for the post of policeman, some fifty answered to their names and were questioned by the members, as we learn, as to their age, nativity and naturalization. No decisions were given nor any appointments made. Be thankful, reader, for so much information, for the body is in effect a "close one." Our reporter was excluded.

Coroner's Investigation.

SUICIDE BY HANGING.

An inquest was yesterday held by Coroner O'DONNELL, at the house No. 237 Cherry-street, on the body of JOHN H. MILLINHAUSEN, a German, aged 60 years, who came to his death by hanging. The evidence showed that deceased was an intemperate man. He went out at an early hour yesterday morning to the wood-house, who c he hung himself. Verdict found by the Jury in accordance. Deceased leaves a wife and three young children.

Camphene.

Last evening, between 7 and 8 o'clock, as MINA MULLER, a servant in the employment of Mr. LOEBER, of No. 43 Division-street, was lighting a large camphene lamp in the kitchen, she allowed the fluid to ignite, and dropping the lamp it was smashed on the floor, and the flame caught her dress, burning her arms and neck severely. Her employer immediately enveloped her in her clothing and other articles at hand, and extinguished the flames. An alarm was given and some excitement created, and Officer GREGORY, who was on duty, instantly hurried to the spot and procured medical assistance.

Fires.

A slight fire occurred on board of a ship lying at the foot of Albany-street, yesterday afternoon. It was extinguished without the aid of the Fire Department.... The alarm of fire about 8½ o'clock last evening was caused by the accidental burning of a mosquito-net, at the house of Dr. ROGERS, No. 75 Broadway.

TO THOSE WHO DRINK AT BARS AND HOTELS.

As a number of persons who keep bar-rooms and hotels are in the habit of filling my empty bottles with their mixed and poisoning gin, and selling it for my "Scheidam Aromatic Schnapps," I would advise all who drink at such places, to mark the appearance of the bottle, and if the wrapper or label should be defaced, require the barkeeper to open a fresh bottle, which is the only way to guard against such fraud.

THE TURF.

The Great Match of the Season.

FLORA TEMPLE AND LADY FRANKLIN!

FLORA AHEAD!

GREAT TIME!

Yesterday afternoon the great trotting match of the season, the anticipation of which seemed to have involved all others in obscurity, and deprived them of interest, came off on the Centreville Course.

All feeling any interest in these matters, appeared to be in attendance. The spectators' stand was completely crowded, and the Judges had great difficulty in enforcing their orders to "clear the track."

It was calculated that not less than 500 vehicles were stabled, or picketed, in the immediate neighborhood.

At the hour announced, the contending mares appeared on the ground, attached to wagons, according to the terms of the match, both in splendid condition. Flora, driven by her owner, JAMES MCMANN, and Lady Franklin, a beautiful roan mare of nearly equal size and weight, driven by HIRAM WOODRUFF.

The odds before the start were 100 to 70 on Flora. These were freely betted, and several bets were laid at 100 to 60.

On the first real attempt to score, the favorite showed her pace and went up in the betting. Several bets but of small amount being immediately made at 100 to 50 or 2 to 1. On the second attempt they got away;—not a very good start; Lady Franklin having the inside and half a length the advantage.

On the second quarter Lady Franklin broke and Flora passed her; keeping the lead she made the half mile past in 39 seconds—some six lengths ahead.

On the third quarter Flora broke slightly, but quickly recovering lost nothing, and they came round on the back stretch neck and neck till near the stand, where Flora arrived ahead by two or three lengths in 2:37, having, moreover, gained the inside of the track.

The odds in Flora's favor now rose, and $100 to $30 was offered, with few takers. On the second round, the terms being two mile heats, Flora kept her pace, and the roan steadily kept her at it; neither broke up at all, and Flora keeping her position won the heat by several lengths. Time declared 5:12½.

SECOND HEAT.

The odds in favor of Flora increased considerably before the second heat—$100 to $25, and even to $20, was several times offered, but with few takers, and some small bets were laid at even $100 to $10.

The second start was better than the first. Lady Franklin was again inside, on the start; but a few lengths from the post, Flora overhauled her, but in her excitement broke up. She lost nothing, however, by it, and quickly recovered her pace, led to the half mile post, but at no great speed, the time being called at 40 seconds. The odds now again rose, and $100 to $20 and to $10 were freely offered. On the third quarter Flora got considerably ahead, making it in 19 seconds, when, apparently, feeling herself safe, she settled down and came in steadily, beating the roan, which broke slightly on the back stretch, about 5 or 6 lengths. Time, 5:11½.

The race lacked excitement, from the fact that most persons were satisfied that Flora would be the winner from the time of starting, but it was a very fine and very pretty one. The day was propitious, but rather warm—the nags in good condition, and well driven; and all seemed satisfied there was fair play—a clear stage and no favor—and that Flora Temple had proved herself in this beating her then competitor, "the best trotting mare in America." The time has never been equaled (in wagons) except by these mares—viz: 5:12½, 5:11¼.

A second race was to have come off between HIRAM WOODRUFF, who entered and was to drive Hard Road, s. g., (of Boston,) and JAMES OTT, owner and driver of Maywick, b. g.—to trot mile heats, best three in five, in harness. Preparations were made, and bets laid two to one on the sorrel, when his backer, (Woodruff,) having won the poll, suddenly declared himself dissatisfied with his steed, (who, by the way, seemed a little lame behind,) and consented to pay forfeit.

LONG ISLAND.

Know-Nothing Nominations in Kings Co.

Senator—JOHN H. RHODES, Whig.

Sheriff—GEORGE H. SIMONSON, Whig.

Register—ENGLEBERT LOTT, Soft Democrat.

County Judge—WM. H. GALE, Whig.

County Clerk—GERARD M. STEVENS, Democrat.

The above may be relied on with a moderate son of assurance. STEVENS and LOTT are Temples. The original design, as the story goes, was to "put none but Democrats on the" ticket. But the alarm having been given, the above is the result.

MARRIED

DIED.

MASONIC NOTICE.—The members of Naval Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons are respectfully requested to attend the funeral of their late brother, THOMAS R. BENNIS, P. M., from his late residence, No. 236 Avenue A (to-morrow) morning, Sept. 12, at 10½ A. M. The members of the fraternity are respectfully invited to attend. The friends of the family, and the members of the Eighteenth Ward Police are respectfully invited to attend. By order W. M.

D. SIMONS, Secretary.

In Brooklyn, on Tuesday morning, Sept. 11, at 7 o'clock, ELIZABETH SEAMAN, widow of the late James Seaman, of New-York, aged 84 years.

The relatives and friends of the family are respectfully invited to attend the funeral from the residence of her daughter, No. 248 Henry-st., Brooklyn, this afternoon, at 3 o'clock, without further invitation.

In Brooklyn, on Sunday, Sept. 9, ARTHUR DARBY, aged 28 years. The remains were taken to the Cemetery of the Evergreens, from Flushing-av.

In Brooklyn, L. I., suddenly, on Saturday, Sept. 8, SALLIE, wife of Daniel W. Harrington, and daughter of John F. Knowles, formerly of Charlestown, R. I. Also, on the 9th inst., JOHN, infant son of the above.

Their remains were interred in Cypress Hills Cemetery.

Although unconscious most of the time, and suffering great physical agony during her illness, yet she left the blessed assurance that through it all, with a earthly love was powerless to afford aid, she was sustained by Him who triumphed over death, and she exclaimed several times distinctly "Victory"—"Glory."

In Brooklyn, on Tuesday, Sept. 11, MARGARET MORISON, aged 56 years and 14 days.

Her friends, and those of her brother, THOMAS A. MORISON, are respectfully invited to attend her funeral this (Wednesday) afternoon, at 4 o'clock, from her late residence, No. 56 Henry-st., Brooklyn.

At Orange, N. J., on Monday, Sept. 10, WALLACE, youngest son of Robert W. and D. W. Aborn, aged 1 year and 11 months.

In Providence, R. I., on the 6th inst., of consumption, HENRY CHACE, youngest son of Daniel Wightman, Esq., aged 19 years.

TUESDAY, Sept. 11—P. M.

The steamer Arago, at this port from Havre and Southampton, Aug. 29, and the Africa, at Halifax from Liverpool, Sept. 1, bring Money and Market advices from Europe one week later than the previous packet. The Liverpool Cotton market is rather firmer, with sales of 31,420 bales for the week, of which the trade took for consumption 10,500 bales. The quotations are not altered, except for Middling descriptions, which are a sixteenth dearer. The sales the day before the Africa sailed were 12,000 bales. Flour and Wheat are substantially the same in price as by the Atlantic, though the tendency was to easier prices on account of fine weather and the English harvest. Indian Corn 1s. lower. Some of the circulars quote a speculative demand for Corn. Beef and Pork not so brisk. Bacon firm, and Lard 6d. higher. The state of trade at Manchester is favorably reported. The London circulars quote a further advance in Sugars, with a speculative demand for most articles of Colonial produce. Railroad Iron up to £8 10s. There is no important change noticed in American Stocks, except a steadier market than reported by the previous circulars. BELL's quotations are as follows:

The Bank of England had lost £2,656,000 in Specie on the weekly report, but the supply of Money was easy, and the Funds steady, 91 to 91½.

The Banks have a larger demand for Money this week from their mercantile dealers, to accommodate whom they are curtailing to some extent their demand loans made to Brokers and others on Stock security. The change is sensibly felt in the Street, by this class of borrowers, and there was more than the usual stir to-day in making up Bank accounts. Some of the Brokers say they have not seen a harder time since last December. The amount of Stock in several of the speculative Railroads afloat in Wall-street, to be taken care of by the Brokers, is said to be heavier than usual, and the buyers on time pay a tempting shave to parties who have the means, or the ability to command the means to carry the contracts. For ordinary business purposes, the rates of Money are 7@8 ⅌ cent. The rates of Foreign Exchange closed steady on London at 109¾ @110; the regular Bankers asked the outside figure, but first-class transient Bank bills, and others made at home, were done at 109¾, and some Southern Bank endorsements at 109¾. The mail for England will not be a large one. There was a heavy business done by the leading Continental drawer in France, at 5f. 12½ centimes to the dollar, and Gold bars will go forward by the steamer from the same and other parties to the extent of about half a million of dollars. The Sub-Treasury balance was increased to-day $151,936. It now stands $5,846 648.

The transactions at the Stock Exchange Board were not generally important, though the business in
